Socialist landslide gives Mitterrand absolute control

From Charles Hargrove, Paris, June 21

The Socialist Party won bistoric victory in tonight's second ballot of the French parliamentary elections and the Communist Party suffered an historic defeat. With an esti-mated 296 seats, the Socialists have obtained some 50 seats more than the absolute majority of 246 in the new National Assembly, and seven times as many as the Communist Party, which has been more than halved in strength by the irresistible force of the Socialist Paradoxically, the Communists may reap Cabinet posts in spite of their mauling at the hands of the voters.

The Socialists' election record has only once been bettered in this century; by the Gaullist victory in the June 1968 backlash against the students' and workers' unrest of the previous May. They are now in sole command of the new Parliament and in a posi-tion to translate into law, without let or hindrance from any party on their right or on their left, all the policies contained in their programme.

The question is which programme: the Socialist manifeste of 1980, with its strong Marxist overtones; or the "socialist project" adopted earlier this year, on the eve of the presidential election campaign, with its emphasis on doctrinal principles like mationalizations or ples like nationalization; or President Mitterrand's own campaign promises, which are distinctly more social democratic in tone.

Whatever the answer to that question, it is abundantly clear that a clear majority of French voters, which has been tranfs-lated into an overwhelming majority of members of Parliament by the amplifying effects of the majority voting system, have opted for a social democratic type of society, and not for a socialist one, and even less for the Marxist variety.

They have shown this through their two successive rebuffs to the Communist Party, on April 26 and on June 14, when it lost about one million voters.

M Pierre Juqin, one of the Communist Party leaders who lost his seat to a Socialist in the National Assembly elections, said tonight his party was immediately ready to take office in government.

It is also abundantly clear, as several commentators empha-sized this evening, that the Socialists also have sole responsibility for the success or failure of their policy. They cannot, like their Giscardian predecessors, plead the divisions of the government majority in mitigation of it.

That is why there is a strong probability that France, for the first time since 1946, will have Communist ministers in the Communist ministers in the Government M Pierre Mauroy, the Prime Minister, stated explicitly tonight that it was a possibility, and there would be talks tomorrow between the two parties. M Georges Marchais, the Communist leader, for his part, emphasized that his party was prepared to his party was prepared to accept the principle of joint Cabinet responsibility.

Whatever the shock, the presence of Communists in the Government would be to con-idence both in business circles In France and to foreign opinion, President Mitterrand is likely to decide that, as they have no hold over him and are, a diminished political force, it is preferable to make them share in the responsibility for the conduct of affairs, than to. leave them free to set up a left-wing opposition to his government if things become difficult for it. This would also be in tune with his strategy of the union of the left, and the unequivocal left-wing anchorage of Socialist policy, to which he owes his victory both in the presidential: in the parliamentary

In a sense, the Socialists' victory is almost too complete and the defear of their enemies too resounding. The balance of political forces is now too one-sided—even more so than in the days of Gaulist domination. It will require enormous will and statesmanship on the part of M Mitterrand to keep the many trends in his own party under control, and to steer the

While the Socialists gained some 173 seats, more than doubling their strength, the doubling their strength, the Communists dropped from 86 to 43. The outgoing majority suffered a rout of similar proportions, with the Gaullist strength in the new parliament reduced from 155 to 81, and the Giscardian UDF from 119 to 71.

Alone of the leaders of this outgoing majority M Jacques Chirac, the Mayor of Paris, had the honesty to concede on television tonight: "We must draw the leaders of the control of the leaders of this leaders of this leaders of this outgoing the leaders of this outgoing majority M Jacques Chirac the leaders of this outgoing majority M Jacques Chirac the leaders of this outgoing majority M Jacques Chirac the leaders of this outgoing majority M Jacques Chirac the leaders of the lessons of events by seeking the lessons of events by seeking the causes in ourselves and not elsewhere." These were the failure of the outgoing majority to convence a majority of French voters that it could introduce the policy of change they wanted.

The completeness of the Socialists' victory was emphasized this evening by the devistation 'they wrought among leading personalities both of the outgoing majority and of the Communist Party. M Georges Marchais was the only member of the secretariat of the Communist Party's central committee to communist the committee to committee the committee th tral committee to recover his sear. All five others lost theirs. On the other side of the political divide, a number of M Giscard D'Estaing's former ministers and members of his staff were engulfed in the pink tide which has submerged the country. Worst of all for the Giscardian UDF, it has lost the head of its parliamentary party, M. Roger Chinaud, and its future as a coherent political force is very doubtful.

Today's voting participation was substantially higher than Sunday's, which almost beat an all time record for abstentions under the Fifth Republic, with the exception of the parlia-mentary elections of 1962. But even son, with a poll of around 76 per cent compared with just under 71 per cent a week ago, the results merely accentuated the trends of the first ballot. Mitterrand promises democratic Job losses will keep on rising'

Britain is facing more than another decade of sluggish economic growth, continued high inflation and mounting unemployment, according to the latest forecast from Cambridge Econometrics published today.

Manufacturing production and total industrial output will still be below 1979 levels in 1990, inflation will be running at 10 per cent a year, while memployment is predicted to climb steadily to 31 million by 1986. 1986 and a peak of 4 million over the following 10 years.

In the short term Cambridge Econometrics sees no tign of any sustained economic recovery this year or next, trough of the recession has through of the recession has been reached.

Instead it expects the Government to engineer a classic pre-election boom in 1983 by cutting the basic rate-of income tax to 25 per cent, even at the cost of abandoning its objective of further reducing public sector borrowing.

"By this stage in the Govern-ment's life we believe that a dramatic cut in direct taxes will become a political imperative", the report says.

Cambridge Econometrics is the commercial arm of an economic modelling research project at the university and is nor connected with the Cam-bridge Economic Policy Group headed by Mr Wynne Godley.

The report does not expect the Government's objective of single figure inflation by early, next year to be achieved, mainly because of sterling's recent fall,

It sees inflation slipping from an average of 12; per cent this year to 11 per cent in 1982, and remaining around these levels for the subsequent four years.

This is in sharp contrast to Mrs Thatcher's statement last week that the Government was aim-ing for nothing less than cutting inflation to low single figures.

Continued inflation above 10 per cent per annum and rising unemployment over the medium term highlight the failure of the present govern-ment's monetarist experiment", tissue, share a common difficulty. It concerns the question of exactly how cells are damaged when they are put into cold storage.

That issue is the subject of intensive study from different standpoints by medical research groups and plant breeding specialists in Britain, the United States and elsewhere. But scientists working in a third subject, at the Cultura Centre of Algae and Protozoa at the Institute of Terrestrial

The way they occur is being unravelled gradually with the help of a novel type of microscope which can be used at -196°C enabling scientists to see what is hap pening to different parts of an animal or plant cell undergoing the stock of supercooling and warming. A similarly smooth reselection was enjoyed by Mr Tam Dalyell in West Lothian, and on Friday Dr Dickson Mabon, a former under secretary at the Scottish Office and junior minister in the Department of Energy, was the sole life that MPs would have to get used to, but there had been little sign that the left wing was attempting to use the system to extend their influence. Even such notable right wingers as Mr George Robertson were not being opposed, although his sponsorship by the General and Municipal Workers' Union has no doubt made the left hesitate to put in a challenge. Their policy is to avoid driving any kind of wedge between the party and the unions which right wingers could exploit.

The fights, which ostensibly started over a Muslim plan to build a maque on land designated for a Christian Coptic church in the slumland suburb of Sheroeya, was the most serious prest that the crowded city has experienced since the 1977 food riots.

There were moments on Friday hight when the disturbances began to spread around the capital in a similar manner. Almost immediately after the arrival of the first police riot squads the crowds turned against the authorities. President Sadat has made no comment on the riots. The riots began in one of the slums that occupy so many square miles of Cairo and which have never benefited from the millions of dollars that the United States is pouring into Expot to prop up the economy. Sherebeya is a place of filth, heat and human exhaustion, a waste land of six square miles of open sewers, rubbish tips, tram tracks and of flats.

If was here that the first violence occurred last Thursday, Inflamed by the mosque building dispute, Christiaus and Muslims began fighting each other after a Christiau family inadvertently threw its rubbish on to the balcony of Muslim neighbours. In Sherebeya's housing blocks, the occupants usually throw their refuse from the windows, as medieval Londoners did.

The first troops to arrive were simost overwhelmed by the mobs and retreated while showering hundreds of tear gas canisters into the crowds. Cars were set on fire, houses were looted and barricades of rubbish erected across the entrances to the area.

By the weekend, Mr Nabawi Ismail, the Interior Minister and Deputy Prime Minister, had put an estimated 250,000 riot police, security men and troops around the Cziro slums.

In Parliament he said he would shoot anyone who tried to exploit the tension and ordered the police to be firm and decisive. Sherebeya is part of his parliamentary constitu-

Relations between Egypt's Muslim community and the Christian Copts-who make up about six million of the country's 41 million people

Muslims and Christians were involved in rioting in Alexandria last year and President Sadat has been insulted by the Coptic Pope Shenouda, who refused to meet him. Although there are no reliable figures, the Coptic community was generally regarded as more wealthy than its Muslim neighbours until President Sadar's new economic policies opened up Egypt to foreign investment.

Christian economic power in the country was somewhat eroded by this and in recent years both communities have tended to guard their rights to guard their rights and privileges more jealously.

But the cause of the latest outbreak of rioting almost certainly has its roots in poverty.
Along the Sherebeya tram tracks this morning, about half the people were wearing clothes covered in grime and several were walking barefoot. At intervals along the main road beside the building site that prompted the fighting, men and women had to tiptoe through seewage. As long as these conditions subsist, it is difficult to see how further rioting can be prevented.

A voice cries out:

AStaggering Turnin World Events

is due to erupt in the next few years!

T WILL INVOLVE violently the United States, Britain, Western Europe, and the Middle East.

It's already rather late for the Free World to come awake to the real meaning behind current world events!

World leaders do not see clearly what is coming. WHY? Why are the best minds not seeing—leaders everywhere, heads of state around the world.—scientists, educators, editors, news analysts—bankers, industrialists, leaders in business and commerce?

They are all the product of modern education. They have been faisely educated in a system where the most important dimension in knowledge is unknown and untaught. They have been deceived into closing their minds to the basic CAUSES of present events and trends.

The world has been falsely educated to ignore CAUSES and deal with EFFECTS! There had to be a CAUSE of present and coming EFFECTS. There is a CAUSE that has produced strife, violence and war-poverty, wretchedness, human suffering — crime, wide-spread immorality, the decadence in the basic foundation of any healthy and stable society, the FAMILY UNIT! But the leaders do not know, and certainly do not correct the CAUSES!

World Explosion to Erupt

There has been a fatal missing dimension in the dissemination of knowledge. Leaders do not know what man is, or the purpose and meaning of life! They were not taught to distinguish the true values from the false. They did not learn the real CAUSES of troubles, nor THE WAY to peace, happiness, abundant well-being for all.

They know nothing of the overall PUR-POSE being worked out here below! Consequently they guide humanity in a course in conflict with that purpose! Lacking knowledge of THE WAY to peace, we have no peace. Leaders talk of peace, they profess to work for peace, they fight for peace, while they give approval and blind acceptance of THE WAY that produces WARS!

This world is giving civilization's acceptance to THE WAYS that are the CAUSES of all the world's evils!

HERBERT W. ARMSTRONG Founder and Editor in Chief of the PLAIN TRUTH magazine

And now we are approaching the final grand smash explosion. It will stagger the mind of man beyond the bounds of samity! Forces are at work today on plans, conspiraces that soon will erupt the world into violence and chaos such as never occurred before and never shall again! Men now are tampering with forces of nature they lack the prudence, knowledge, ability and wisdom to control!

The Master Plan

In this folly of educated ignorance it has become fashionable and intellectually titillating to ignore the basic Mind and Power over all – the PURPOSE being worked out here below, and the master plan for its working out – the invisible but Supreme Power now soon to intervene and END the impending world chaos. It will be done to us, before mankind blasts itself out of existence!

Unreal though it may seem to those steeped in today's educational deceptions, some 2,500 years ago the Supreme Power of the universe inspired a man named Isaiah to quote Him, saying. "I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning... saying. "My counsel shall stand."

The great world powers are formulating their plans and policies, but the next few years will see astounding events explode in a manner very different than they plan.

WHY? Because there does exist the great God who says: "the Eternal wrecks the purposes of pagans, he brings to nothing what the nations plan; but the Eternal's PURPOSE stands for ever, and what He plans will last from age to age... the Eternal looks from heaven, beholding all mankind; from where He sits, He scans all who inhabit the world; He who alone made their minds, He notes all they do."

The Vital Prophecies

Through inspired prophets, this same Eternal foretold, beginning 2,500 years ago, the world events of the future – zeroing in particularly on our time NOW! All events prophesied to occur up to now have happened! – without a miss! The rest – the climactic crisis of our END time – is certain and SOON!

Yet the world's best minds are in total ignorance of tremendous impending events. Neither religionists nor theologians understand!

WHY? Approximately one third of all the world's best seller is filled with PROPHECIES – mostly foretelling our immediate future! Yet the key that unlocks prophecy to UNDERSTANDING had been lost! That vital key has been found! But because it is NOT the doctrine they have been preaching, evangelical theologians ridicule it.

That vital KEY is the identity of the United States and Britain in biblical prophecy.

Where are they spoken of in biblical prophecies—especially permining to our immediate future? Small nations— Ethiopia, Lioya, Egypt, Turkey—are mentioned. Russia is mentioned. How could such a great world power as the United States be ignored? IT ISN'T! What you have read on this page is taken from the introduction of this revealing book, The United States and Britain in Prophecy.

We will present it gratis to those whose unprejudiced eyes are willing to see. It is an eye-opening, intriguing book - 200 pages. You may have an attractive paperbound copy, illustrated in colour, gratis on request - with no follow-up.

Lung infections commonly complicate patients convales-cence after a major operation (our Medical Correspondent writes). Part of the lung may have become blocked during the operation, increasing its suscep-tibility to infection. Coughing is painful for anyone with a healing surgical wound, and this weakens the normal defences against respiratory diseases.

The Pope's doctors will be trying to identify the microorganism causing the infection and searching for any other contributory factor. They will be investigating the possibility that his fever might be due to a blood clot in the lungs. Once the investigations are complete, the treatment should be straightforward.

Japan has angered the Assoof South-East Asian Nations by revealing Asean's peace plan for Cambodia due to be disclosed at a conference on Cambodia in New York next

The chances of tempting Vietnam into a diplomatic settle-ment of the Cambodian conflict received a further, possibly fatal, blow from hard-line statements by Mr Alexander Haig, the American Secretary of State, during his five-day visit

China turns blind eye to cult of superstition

From David Bonavia

Peking's recent angry is action to the appointment of a Chinese archbishop by the Vati can underlines the hostility still felt by the Communist Party towards religious organizations which defy official control of their activities.

In the case of the Roman Catholic Church, this hostility is especially marked, since the church in China is supposed by Rome to obey the decisions of the Pope, over which Peking has no control.

Roman Catholics and Protes tants alike are allowed to carry out religious observances so long as they do not conflict with the party's social and educational policies. For instance a Chinese Catholic who publicly opposed contraception would be immediately in conflict with the party's policy of slowing down China's ruinous population growth.

Ironically, it is not the Vati-can which bothers China's leaders most in religious matknown as Taoism), the only reli-gion truly native to China. Unlike the Buddhists, the Daoists have been granted no licence to continue or revive their practices, which are de-nounced as "feudal supersti-

The pure philosophical aspect of Daoism, as propounded by the cult's best known sage, Lao Tzu, is of no concern to the authorities.

What is under attack is the huge number of mystical and animistic practices still pursued in the rural areas, especially in scuthern China. Fortune-telling by blind people, communicating with gods and spirits, selling unauthorized medicines, holding processions, making sacrifices offering prayers for rain or for childbirth, reading horoscopes and practising the ancient Chinese art of geomency—these are all denounced and in theory suppressed

However, a recent religious procession in Guangdong pro-vince, in which a peasant woman was dressed up as a male god, and paraded through the district holding a sword, went on for days without being stopped by the local authorities. An official report from Canton said schools were closed armed soldiers joined the procession, and crops were trampled in the fervour of the festival. Local communist officials often do not intervene to pravent Daoist ceremonies and superstitious practices, for fear that they would grouse too much hostility among the local people. Nevertheless, a closer line has now been drawn between such activities and genuine religions, which are defined as organized bodies of believers with a systematic world outlook. Under this definition tianity, Buddhism and Islam are officially approved as long as their followers do not try to spread their beliefs or interfere with the education of their

They must also toe the line politically. The senior Muslim imams in Ninjiang (Chinese Central Asia), for instance, have to meet party officials once a week for readings from news papers, discussion of foreign affairs and briefings on recent developments in party policy. And while Tibetan and Mongolian Buddhists are no longer strongly discouraged from public prayer and worship, they must not try to spread their beliefs or interfere with state education of the young.

Despite official Chinese invitations to return to Tibet, the Dalai Lama has taken up decision on the matter, evidently because he is doubtful of the recognition he would be accorded as a spiritual leader. China's political leaders have now learnt that religions can exist underground for a long time, and surface quite vigorously when permitted. This is difficult to reconcile with the Marxist idea that religions will die a natural death when economic contradictions have been

The Times guide to Wimbledon 1981

Borg: six in a row?

Today is the opening day of the 1981 Wimbledon Lawn Tennis Champion ships, an event of such quintessential Englishness that it could not possibly be staged in any place but a genteel middle-aged suburb of south-west

London.

The English are splendid at everything to do with games, except winning them. Wimbledon has not borne the official title of World Championships since 1923; this year's record prize money of £322,136, of which £21,600 goes to the men's singles winner and £19,440 to the winning lady, swell below the riches on offer at the other tenuis temples, Forest Hills and Paris.

on offer at the other tennis tennies, Forest Hills and Paris.

Nor is the All England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club (formerly the All England Croquet and Lawn Tennis Club) known for its openness, democracy or youth. The chairman is 68-year-old Air Chief Marshal Sir Brian Burnett (who can still deliver a mean backhanded volley), and the 375 members pay a ludicrous annual subscription of £8.70 for a whole catalogue of privileges and creature comforts. The waiting list for entry to the blazered sanctum is so long that by the time a postulant gains admission he is almost too decrept to play termis. And there are no women in the club, only ladies. Yet this exclusive brotherhood of sub-aristocrats manages to organize the premier championship of the world, which not even the English weather can entirely dampen. In the 103 years of Winbledon, only 24 complete days play have been lost by rain.

It is of course, the oldest tennis championship. The first event in 1877 played to a crowd of hundreds and a net profit of one and tempence. The attendance of 343,091 in 1979 remains a record, and is unlikely to be exceeded despite the provision of 1,250 extra seats in a reconstructed Number One Court. Every seat for the Centre Court could be sold six times over. But this year, there will be no tickers on sale on the day for the men's finals and semi-finals, or for the ladies' finals.

To run the two-week event requires an army. Fred Hoyles, a 57-year-old Lincolnshire farmer, heads a squad of 300 umpires and linesmen, appearing for the first time this year in green uniforms, and aided by electronic eyes to watch the service lines. Willie Wonfor, late of the SAS Regiment, drills 74 ball boys and ten girls; the girls may aspire only to the lesser courts. The young ball persons are no longer from Dr Barnardo's, but from local Wimbledon schools.

Jack Yardiey heads a team of 12 groundsmen making velvet out of grass. After a soaking May, he has been glad of the recent sunahine to dry his treasured swards. But would have liked more practice matches to have the turf "played in". There are, besides, 200 servicemen and London firemen acting as stewards, 70 students, ready to heave the rain covers and clean the place up at the end of each day, eight dressing room attendants, 17 scoreboard operators and a squad of caterers serving a ton of strawberries each day.

For all the smooth organisation, Wimbledon has had its excitements. There was the occasion in 1905 when May Statton appeared on court in a kneelength skirt, but being only 18 she got away with it. The year 1929 was a seminal one in the matter of lady players' dress. Billie Tapecott left her stockings off.

In 1960 Maria Bueno of Brazil wore knickers of purple and green. Those being the All England club colours, she was not ordered off. In 1946, Petra of France had the distinction of being the last men's champion to play in long trousers.

Today there is no regulation about players' dress, except that it must be predominantly white and entirely free

One regular feature will be missing.

Mrs Bilbe Jean King, who has more Wimbledon championships, singles and doubles, to her credit than any other player, having won 208 of her 243 matches, has retired from the Centre Court with her 20 trophies to take a seat in the television commentary hor.

The All England Club's detractors, who say that the £411,455 of Wimbledon profits that it ploughed back ino the game last year could have been a lot more, recall that since 1905 only two Englishmen, Gore and Such fine points will trouble the expected 340,000 spectators only slightly. To be furnished and burnished by Wimbledon sun, savour the costliest strawberries in south Lon-don, and watch the best tennis in the world, will be satisfaction enough.

Peter Fleming and John McEuroe (USA).
Fleming, aged 26, is a blond 6ft 5in, hits very hard, and has an essentially orthodox game that admirably complements McEuroe's versatility. They were Wimbledon and US champions were wiminened and US champions in 1979 and remain the best team in the world unless McEuroe is preoccupied with singles. Their bludgeoning brutality, spiced by finesse, allows opponents little or no time for patterned ingenuity.

Peter McNamara and Paul McNamee (Australia).

McNamee, aged 26, is the showman of the two and likes to hurl himself about at the net — the whole length of it, McNamara, the straight man, mostly stays back and takes what his partner misses. Kathy Jordan and Anne Smith (USA). Miss Smith, aged 21, has the good-humoured serenity to keep her partner's emotional temperature within bounds. These young top seeds won their first tournament together in 1976 (the US girls' indoor championship), were reunited in 1979 to win the US clay court title, and in 1980 became French and Wimbledon champions.

Martina Navratilova and Pamela Shriver (USA). The leading women change partners more often than the men do. These more often than the men do. These two have formed a successfully powerful team this year. Formerly Miss Navvaniova won seven grand slam doubles titles — two Wimbledon, one French, three US, and one Australian — with four different parmers, while Miss Shriver was still learning the trade. The combination of left-hander and right-hander is a basic bonus for a doubles pair.

Rosemary Casals (USA) and Wendy Turnbull (Australia).
Miss Casals, aged 32, remains a versatile shot-maker whose doubles skills have survived a slight decline in agility. New generation game without a look at the old scoreboard

The 95th Wimbledon championships, which begin today, have already assumed a special importance. The public heart of the tournament has been shifted. This operation has, in fact, been in progress for years. To reduce congestion and make the concourse more of a promenade, the All England Chab created a new show court out by the water tower and then installed the four new cours of "North Wimbledon". Now the concourse has been surpped of its renowned elec-tronic scoreboard. That scoreboard, flickering its point-by-point messages, riveted the attention of those viceriously savouring dramas they could not see: matches on they could not see: matches on the centre and No 1 courts. To do that this year, the public will have to walk round to the tea lawns alongside Church Road and gaze at a new score-board. There will be another above the members' balcony but that will not indicate the points. score. The changes make sense because congestion has long been an irritant. But the space-consuming bulk of the new building at the southern end of court one has swallowed a piece of kistory, and for most of us changed the character of Wimbledon. line monitors has been extended from the two main courts to courts two and three. A stiffer grading system for court officials, together with the introduction of 90-minute stints for line judges, represents a further stride towards an unattainable perfection in the conduct of matches. The envy of the world

Wimbledon remains the envy of every other tournament in the world and accepts the paradox that change is the price of constancy. We may have reservations about the type of tennis played on grass: and reservations, too, about Wimbledon's prim social flavour. But both are essential components of the tournament's traditional character. Under the chairmanship of the late Herman David and, since 1974, Air Chief Marshal Sir Brian Burnett, the championships committee have shown dox that change is the price of committee have shown enlightened discretion in blending conservative principles with pragmatic sense.

There are still difficult decisions to make concerning, for example, the tie-break and the 2 o'clock start. To use the tie-break yet discard it in the fifth set of a men's match or the third set of a women's is plainly inconsistent. The reasoning is that a tie-break is tolerable as a means of finishing a set but not as a means of finishing a set but not as a means of finishing a march. Yet in last year's five championship events 40 matches finished with tie-breaks; including the women's singles final (and almost the men's singles final, too). too). To offset the tie-break, the excessive rest periods incor-porated in today's rules are prolonging matches. In recent years, too, the weather has been less benign towards Wimbledon founded specious arguments that they were impracticable because of the difficulty of clearing the garbage and assembling the staff. Better value of early start

As a result there has been scheduling congestion and a series of emergency starts at noon. These early starts con-

Those defending the tradi-tional 2 o'clock start have been reduced to two arguments: the need to stretch the programme into the evening for those who must work during the day, and the tradition of a formal, leisurely luncheon for the privileged minority who are well fed at Wimbledon. The second point is nonsense because diners can, if they wish, take their time while the rest take their time while the rest of us watch tennis. The evening programme can easily be en-sured by "resting" damaged courts or by expanding the mixed doubles or women's singles fields.

For most of the public, getting to and from Wimbledon

During the rain-beset French championships early starts ensured that customers still had a chance to see a reas able amount of tennis for their money. A' 1 o'clock start at future Wimbledons would be a popular compromise.

Weather permitting, these should be unusually interesting championships. Chris Lloyd and Biorn Borg, who have both been winning "grand slam" singles championships since 1974 are beginning to look vulnerable. Each excels on slow clay courts, yet Mrs. Lloyd recently but the yet Mrs Lloyd recently lost the French championship and Borg was taken to five sets by Ivan Lendl in the men's final. If that can happen on clay Mrs Lloyd and Borg should logically be even more shaky on grass.

Hunger with a sharper edge

With Paris in mind it remains to be seen if Mrs Lloyd's con-fidence has suffered more than her pride, Tracy Austin's form at Eastbourne suggested a total recovery from sciatics. The women's champion will probably be the winner of the likely semifinal between these two, whose common. Miss Austin's hunger for success has the sharper edge and she must be tipped to win. The other obvious contenders are Martina Navratilova, whose what it was two years ago, and Hana Mandlikova (Australian and French champion) and Andrea Jaeger, who both need more experience of Wimbledon before inviting confidence. There are six teenagers among the women's seeds and the names in both seeding lists indicate an inviting for Mrs. indicate—ominously for Mrs Lloyd and Borg—that this may be a year of change. Borg has won only three tournaments since last year's Wimbledon. Can he reasonably be expected to withstand the challenge of John McEnroe, as he did in that often marvellous final a year ago? Probably not. But Borg should extend his record sequence of Wimbledon wins from 35 to 41 before McEnroe stops him. The most evident threat to both, if they give him the slightest chance, is Jimmy Con-nors, who has played four finals in seven years. Lendl is not yet volleying with the assurance a Wimbledon champion needs. Of Wimbledon champion needs. Of the other seeds only Brian Gottvried, Roscoe Tanner and Victor Pecci seem capable of causing a stir. These three all have potentially exciting first round matches but the first seed to go could be Guillermo Vilas, whose Wimbledon record is modest. His opponent will be Mark Edmondson, who beat Tanner at Bristol on Saturday. Five of Edmondson's last six singles at Wimbledon have gone to a fifth set. Even when he loses, he plays a lot of tennis.

loses, he plays a lot of tennis. Players must adjust

Luckily the withdrawal of Gene Mayer has not disturbed the balance of the draw. The two players next in line for a seeding. Johan Kriek and Adriano Panatta, happened to be in Mayer's section of the draw. Kriek is having some draw. Kriek is having some back trouble, so the inimitably spectacular Panatta has every chance to celebrate his 10th Wimbledon with a run to the last 16, even the last 8, that would be fun for all of us.

McEuroe and Peter Fleming must be favourites to win the men's doubles unless bad weather gives McEuroe an unreasonably busy programme of reasonably busy programme of singles and doubles, as it did last year. The outcome of the two other doubles championships is less predictable All the competitors are hoping that they have made the necessary adjustment to the special nature of grass-court tennis, Wendy White, for exam-ple, ranks 23rd in the world but has little experience of courts on which she must slide Given a rainy day, we may discuss all that more fully. But let us hope there are no rainy days at what could be a superb Wimbledon dominated by the new generation's tekeover bid. Even so, we shall miss that old scoreboard.

If England were to add appreciably yesterday morning to their overnight 94 for six, the runs would have had to come from Botham and Downton. But Downton was soon leg-before to Alderman, the ball cutting back at him, and Botham, after looking more like it than for some time, was beautifully taken at second slip by Border, low to his left. By the time Willis skied Lillee into the covers his, and Dilley's ya-hooing covers his, and Dilley's ya-hooing had taken the total to 125. It was not unlike the famous catch of Benaud's in the Lord's Test Match of 1956. Apart from Botham, the best of England's second innings batting came from Gatting and Gower.

Gatting's dismissal exemplified the problems of the pitch. He was leg-before to a ball that kept low, the ball before, of the same length, having whistled past his chin. As an attempt at a pitch to provide a well-balanced Test match; as distinct from an eventfulone, it was a fallure. Australia lost their first wicket

BIRMINGHAM: Derbyshire (4 pts) beat Warwickshire by 42 runs.

First the hero, then the loudly booed viliain of the piece, the New Zealand batsman John Wright won this John Player game for Derbyshire but in doing so lost the good will of the Edgbaston crowd for binself and his team. The heat and burden of the day have again been borne for Warwickshire by Dennis Amiss, who captained the side and was only removed from the crease by a controversial catch on the midwicket boundary.

Amiss had reached 80 and was leading a Warwickshire race for victory when he made an enormous pull from a delivery by Oldham. The ball appeared to be sailing above the head of Wright, but the New Zealander stretched his arms, took the catch and stumbled back-First the hero, then the loudly

Warwickshire got their first iece of encouragement when Lthbidge bowled Wood at 65; but Kirsten hit both him and Perryman for legside eixes and the bundred came up in the 18th over. Then Kirsten played an awful shot outside his off-stump and Hummage gave Lethbridge, a and Humpage gave Lethbridge a second wicket.

Wright reached his 50, with six fours in the 21st over. Shortly afterwards he gave Small the gift of his wicket playing, like Kirsten, a Sunday afternoon shot. A rank bad ball, far enough outside the off stump to have been a wide, produced a rank bad shot and another catch behind.

Lloyd showed that Wright did not have a monopoly of left handed graces by turning Newman effortlessly off his toes to the mid-wicket boundary. On this placid strip Lloyd and Amiss were as untroubled as Wright and Wood, but the scoring and running between wickets was slower.

Amis reached his 50 magnificently by whacking Wood for six over long on. When the opening batsman and Warwickshire mainstay accelerated, there were batsman and warmchante main-stay accelerated, there were visions of a home victory. Young Wootton hif a quick and stylish 20, and the Derbyshire fielding be-came a little ragged. Oldham was heavily punished, and Tunnicitite, summoned back to remain the hole neavity punished, and Tunniciffe, summoned back to repair the bole in the dyke, did so by having Wootton caught at mid wicket. Then came the augrily catcalled dismissal of Amiss, and the disintegration of Warwickshire's challenge.

Small comfort

England's selectors, trying to end a run of Test batting flops, can draw only small comfort from the fact that there were six century-makers in the county championship, sponsored by Schweppes, on Saturday.

The six included only two English batsmen—Sussex's Paul Parker and Nortinghamshire's Derek Randall. The others were West Indian Gordon Greenidge, South African Clive Rice, New Zealander John Wright and Sri Lankan Gehan Mendis.

Boyd-Moss had retired earlier with a pulled thigh muscle. Both will be able to bat, although they may need runners, but Pringle's bowling could be missed badly in Oxford's second inmings.

Peck's mishap was more unusual. He jabbed a piece of fint into his right palm when making a diving stop at mid off, and had to have his hand bandaged. The British helmsman Philip Morrison has started well in the Fireball class world championship at Weymouth. He was second in the first race of the series on Saturday and first vesterday after taking advantage of a wind shift on the fourth beat in a light and variable north-easterly breeze. Fifty boats are taking part in the championship and all entries had to qualify first in their own country. Adrian Bell from Ireland, crewed by his wife Maeve, beat Morrison on Saturday with Ed-ward Warden-Owen finishing ward Warden-Owen finishing third. The Bells have been racing and winning in Fireballs for many years, and are always a force to be reckoned with in light weather. Morrison is a relative newcomer, after racing for most of dingby career in restricted classes. He will be at home in any conditions, but some of the overseas entries must be the oversess entries hoping for more wind. Yesterday's race was dominated by Jeremy Bickerton, who led around most of the course, from, at different times, Warden-Owen and Lawrie Smith Smith is a and Lawrie Smith Smith is a past national and world charpion who has been out of the class for a couple of seasons while he was involved with Lionheart, the ill-faned America's Cup challenger. Hole that holds terrors for even the three leading contestants

From John Hennessy Golf Correspondent Philadelphia, June 21

The 14th hole of the Merion golf course is the entrance to a devil's passage. Whatever attack on the course one has in mind it has had to be achieved before then. From now on, survival is all and any player, be he a Nicklans, a Watson or a Trevino, would willingly settle for par over the last five holes. The problems on the last four

The problems on the last four are obvious enough, but why the 14th, measuring 414 yards, you wonder—until you give it the kind of attention that the players have to muster. Does not the trestor give an inviting target? Is not the approach to the green completely without hazard? Is it not a hole where any saff-respecting professional would be aiming for a three, rather than a four? The answer to all three questions is an, emphatic no. is an emphatic no. Why else would the three lead-

Why else would the three leading contestants in the United States Open championship have taken, between them, four over par for that one hole in the third round. George Burus, the leader on 203, and David Graham of Australia, on 206, took five and Jack Nicklaus on 208, took six. To begin with, the player stands on the tee with his guard down after the soft touch, both literally and figuratively, of the 13th; a hole and figuratively, of the 13th, a hole of only 129 yards. Although the view from that tee is of an array of bunkers, peppered with clumps of long grass known as Scorch Broom, the professionals know that they have only to hit a pitching wedge or nine iron as they should and they are on the green with the chance of a two. Two players, John Cook and Jerry Pate, scored three successive twos there last week.

The 14th is something else. They dare not use the driver because the fairway swings left upbill, and Tony Jacklin revived memories of the past when he compiled a superb 68, four under pay, to win the 45,000 Jersey Open at La Moye yesterday. Jacklin, who was winning for the first time in Britain since 1973, played the course by "feeling" the distances through his eyes instead of being influenced by the modern method of strict yardages.

On a course such as this, where driving area, supposing the player can achieve the necessary distance can achieve the necessary distance and draw. A straight hit would land him in thick, clinging rough or in one of the four White Faces of Merion, the bunkers that abound on this fascinating golf course. A hook off the tee, or an attempt to cut the corner, flirts with the out-of-bounds on the left. Having planted your three wood or long fron in the right part of the fairway, you now face a midirou shot while shut in on three sides by more White Faces. Finding the green may be a reasonable prospect, but to find a spot near the pin is a different proposition, and now you arrive on one of the slickest greens on the course, according to the greenkeeper's evidence, with not only subtle undulations unseen by the gallery, but a gully running right through the green, visible from a hundred yards away. You thank your lucky stare for a new four there. The round, and will provide even greater anguish.

From there on, it is all upbill. Burus was one of the few who stole a stroke from the last four holes, by means of a long swinging purt on the 15th and two superb "up and downs" on the last two holes. It seemed impossible that he could get home in two from a deep lie above the last green, but he chipped to about the only square yard available to him for running the ball anywhere near the hole and put it down from six feet, to go home with a three-stroke lead.

But no one tried harder than Jacques Laffize, who had sat on pole position with the latest Talbot Ligier, arguably the best handling car on the circuit this weekend, but had "blown" his advantage

From Johannesburg, Nelson said, "I'm just here to do some coaching—I'm not aware of any games being planned. We will be coaching in the schools and youth clubs with a mixture of blacks, coloureds and whites, which to my mind seems fair enough."

Robertson stakes his claim

By Cliff Temple By Cliff Temple

A new name surfaced yesterday as Britain's selectors consider their six-man team for the inaugural European Cup marathon in France nent September. Andy Robertson, a hollow-faced Army physical training instructor based at Harrogate, threw down a sauntlet which was picked up too late by his opponents when he won the Sendbach marathon in 2hr 14min 23sec, his fastest-evertime by three minutes.

As the benefits of the flat, three-ner-up, said.

"I never kned how far in front I was, and I did have some doubts about whether I'd gone too soon "Robertson admitted. He was born in Kenya of Scottish parents and hopes to run for Scotland in next year's Commonwealth Games. His lead stretched to 600 yards at one point, but as his rivals realized they had underestimated the man who had run 130 miles a week in specific preparation for the race.

Cain and Terry Colton of Wolvehampton were pulling him along the Cheshire lanes, but Colton had to ease off with foot tramp at 21 miles. Cain ran out of road and, despite running a personal best of 2hr 14min 38sec, was, just 80 yards, down on Robertson at the finish.

Julie Barleycorn, a 25-yearold insurance clerk from Crawley, who was a former schoolgirl star but left the sport for five years and used to smoke up to 20 cigarettes a day, led all the way to win the ladies event in 2hr 48min 21sec.

Only Bob Beamon, who won the 1968 Olympics with a fabalous 8.90 metres, has jumped farther than the 19-year-old Lewis, a student at the university of Houston. He was measured at 8.73 metres in the qualifying competition here, but the wind behind him was too strong for the jump to be submitted as a record. The world record can be broken," Lewis said. "But records are not appearant in my mind—I just want to win."

Lewis 'took only one jump before crossing the stadium for the 100 metres. Here he started slowly, accelerating about 60 metres into the race. "At 80 metres, it was all over and I smiled as I took the lead," he said. He was timed at 10.13sec.

He returned to the long jump pht, prepared to jump again but it was not necessary, although the holder, Larry Myricks, fimished with a jump of 8.45 metres. Only seven longer jumps have been recorded.

In other events, Evelyn Ashford, the United States record holder, won the women's 100 metres in 11.07sec 'and Greg Alberto Jaantorena, of Cuba, a former double olympic champion, had to pull out after 300 merres in the semi-finals of the 400 metres. Juantorena, winner of both the 400 and 500 metres in Montreal, had been suffering from a slight tendon injury in his left knee from the evening before.

He said afterwards: "I didn't

McLeod victory sets up a Golden chance

Prague, July 21.—British runners are poised for a clean sweep of the International Amateur Athletic Federation's Golden series after Mike McLeod's 10,000 metres win pere on Friday night. McLeod won in 27min.59.42secs in a follow-up to the 5,000 metres victory by Barry Smith in Gates-head, two weeks ago.

The victories by Smith and McLeod were unexpected, but in the two remaining Golden events, in West Berlin and Brussels in August, another British pair, Olympic 100 metres champion Allan Wells and mile world recordiolder Steve Ovett, will be among the favorities.

McLeod's win, his second Golden 10,000 metres triumph in three years, was a close affair in which he held off fast-finishing teammats Geoff Smith, who was beaten by 100th of a second.

Britons took five of the top six places in a race in which Olympic bronze medallist Mohamed Kedir, of Ethiopia, and experienced Tan-zanian Suleiman Nyambui did most of the work at the front. Nyambui was eventually seventh and Kedir eighth.—Reuter.

From time to time it is suggested that wearing a top hat and tails for a race meeting is an anachronism, but without the pomp, ceremony and glamour Royal Ascot would not be where it is now. "That is why they come. Do away with the trappings and it would descend to the ordinary level", was how. Lord Abergavenuy, the Queen's representative put it to me on Saturday when we discussed the happenings of the previous four days.

The perennial skill of Lester Piggott, Greville Starkey's dash, the rich talent that belongs to those three brilliant trainers Henry Cecil, Guy Harwood and Michael Stoute, those are topics that Michael Seely dwelt upon at length as we feasted on a menu comprising the best flat racing in the world. Obviously the meeting was a great financial success. It is nice to be able to report that the Ascot authority will be pumping money back into prizes next year and probably increasing the minimum level right across the board throughout the season. Stowell lack proper coordination By John Watson

By John Watson

The Ivy Lodge ground at Cirencester Park Polo Club, being used for the first time this season and looking impeccable, formed the stage yesterday when the club's high-goal six-chakka tournament for the Warwickshire Cup entered the quarter-final phase. The opponents were David Yeoman's Southfield, who aggregate 18 goals on handicap, against Lord Vestey's 19-goal Stowell, Park.

Atthough Southfield began with 19-goal Stowell Park.

Although Southfield began with a one-goal lead on handleap, they looked the stronger squad throughout this brisk encounter. Their fulcrum, composed of two Argentines, Juan Jose Alberdi and Martine Zubia, cooperated with the fluency of well-paired greyhounds, while young Charles Beresford supported them thoughtfully and energetically at back.

Their coordination contrasted with their rivals lack of it. With their ivals in C. of it.

THE ARTS

Robbins strikes gold

Tchaikovsky and New York City Ballet made splendid music and dance together during City Ballet's Tchaikovsky Festival at Lincoln Center. Part of the very special character of this festival was given by the permanent setting provided by Philip Johnson, the original architect of the theatre, and his partner, John Burgee. When Balanchine envisaged this homage to Tchaikovsky, he asked Johnson to design what Balanchine called "an ice palace." It is a permanent setting of infinite variety, and that variety was evidenced during this Tchaikovsky Festival. Ballet's Tchaikovsky Festival at

The success of the season lay in the effortless brilliance of Jerome Robbins, who carried all before him. His Plane Pieces proved a work of sumptuous wonderment. For the most part danced by the younger mem-bers of the company, and simply a selection of duets and solos, they obviously recalled his earlier Chopin piano works such as Dances at a Gathering. Yet they had a different rhapsody to them Robbins's skill is to make dance as immediate as the music it lives on. In Piano Pieces. which will assuredly be one of the surviving works of the festival, his musicality, his invention, even his sheer sense of theatre, has never been so well con-

Robbins is at this moment a genius at the creative stroke of his time. He seems to be able to do nothing wrong. There is a gallantry to his concepts, there-is a purity to his achievements. You have the feeling of watching the most incredible choreography emerging from a mind and body totally of our time, and yet totally dominated and transformed by his own mentor genius, George Balan-chine himself.

The relationship between these two men can only be compared, and very aprly compared, with that between Marius Petipa and Lev Ivanov. They had the same relationship of singular involvement, and the or singular involvement, and the same influence one on the other. Only the Maryinsky Theatre in St Petersburg once had this benison of talent. That is really what City Ballet is all about, and certainly it has been really what this festival has achieved. Noted and petrified:

Balanchine and Robbins ended the festival with their ballet Symphony No 6, The Pathetique. In its own way it setthe seal on the entire festival. There were only three movements — the last three — given, and Robbins handles the second movement while Balanchine has choreographed the fourth. The choreographed the fourth. The third movement was taken over entirely by the orchestra, an oddity, but the kind if oddity represented by Peter Martins's

These thematic, almost sche-matic, festivals, which are so much a part of the character of New York City Ballet — such festivals have already been devoted to Stravinsky and Ravel represents the company at its most imaginative and innocent.

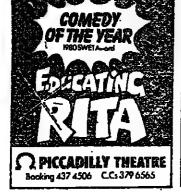

Robbins at his easily fluent and ecstatic was also represented by his movement of The Pathetique, which had precisely the same kind of airs and graces that had characterized his earlier Piano Pieces. with a company led by Patricia McBride and Helgi Tomasson, the dancers had a special energy, a special spirit. One of the most interesting aspects of the work was the manner in which Robbins used diagonal, sequential and paralleled move-ment. But, for a choreographer not particularly happy with ensemble gesture, this marked a The final movement

Balanchine was obviously in-tended to be emblematic of the festival as a whole, with three graces and various figures of angels and death. The result was not entirely satisfactory. Not only did it fail to come together, but it also missed any kind of linking with the fanciful variety of the Robbins section. However, in a minor way, Blanchine did achieve an interesting work with his Hungaria Gypsy Airs. There is no doubt that the festival was a success. Apart from the Robbins pieces, some of the other works were peculiarly fascinating. John Taras's Souvenir de Florence is the most meaningful ballet he has created in years, and probably one could say the same with all honesty of Jacques d'Ambroise's Suite No 2, particularly in its finely abridged version, and Martins's Symphony No 1. This has been a celebration of Tchaikovsky, such as the composer would surely have wanted. Tchaikovsky danced in his heart. But the festival not merely demonstrated the in-credible wealth of Tchaikovsky's music, some of it compara-tively little known, not only its totally risky but apt dance expression, but also what this strange man actually contributed to our concept of dance. Robbins, Balanchine, Taras and Martins paid their choreographic dues to a man who made music dance and dance music. .

Dekker's play (as I remember from a dire night at the Bankside Globe) can be pretry bewildering: partly through its interlocking triple action, of two pairs of divided lovers and the master shoemaker, Simon Eyre's, election as lord mayor, and partly through the complications of court, aristocratic, and civic status — the factor that is usually advanced for putting old plays into modern dress. Dexter includes a new opening, explaining who all the people are, and this strikes means his one miscalculation.

and honest work when poor Rafe has to lose his leg in the war, when the well-connected Lacy can desert to pursue his girl, and when Eyre rises to the top through a fraudulent business transaction?

The answer is that it can because the play inhabits the real world of compremise and contradiction, as Dexter shows in scene after scene - as where Eyre's boys gather around the harmless Hammon on his way to church and threaten him with clubs while announcing their membership of "the gentle craft. Thanks to the broad outlines of the piece, the gentle craft survives, even though John Salthouse turns Firk from the usual clown into a dangerous laughing boy, and John Normington reveals Hodge as an embryonic shop sneward. Repeated passages where the workforce respond to their rawtongued mistress by downing tools strike a very familiar note; an does Eyre's mixture of bullying and open-handed ges-tures (calling for 10 pints and secretly ordering only two) to get them back on the job. get them back on the job.

Alfred Lynch does not make the mistake of taking Eyre at his own valuation. He may be a humour and is inordinately in love with himself. Mr Lynch gets this beautifully across in passages like his first appearance in alderman's robes, hugging himself with pleasure and demanding the desiration of his much abused, shabbily dressed wife. Brends Bruce tells us as much about him as about herself, as she staggers up the affluent ladder, turning up in miserable splendour at a mayoral party and grimacing at the nasty drink she is given in a jewelled bowl, and still glumly putting up with corrential insults after she has

Not the least significant feature of all three is the absence of any conductor to become an intrusive visual focus in performance. They can intrust the control of the control o gation much more directly, as in the medieval mystery plays from which Britten derived his own form. The grace and charm of literary disaster

The Meeting at-Telgte

By Günter Grass Translated by Ralph Manheim Afterword by Leonard Forster

(Secker & Warburg, £5.95) A writer stands on the bank of a river in Germany towards the end of the Thirry Years War. Two corpses bound together, a man and a woman, are washed against the side:

against the side:

After brief hesitation. The peir broke loose from the tangled reeds, spun round planfully in the current, escaped from the eddy, and glided downstream to the mill werr, where evening was blending into night, leaving mothing behind except potential metaphors, which Zesen began at unit in pud with resounding neologisms. He was so hard pressed by language that he had no time to be horrified.

Everybody knows the disasters of war make marvellous copy, and no European novelist of our age has been so exhaustively hard pressed by language to explore and define the relationship between the imaginative artist and the hitherto unimaginable event in his case, the phenomenon of the Third Reich — than Günter Grass. Having finally landed the Flounder as the long-awaited successor to Dog Years and The Tin Driam Grass has now written a highly attractive short book that makes writers and writing in catastrophe its central concern while shedding rueful and ironic light on the iterary and historical resourcefulness of his own work.

Being set in seventeenth-century Westphalia during the imaginary two-day encounter of historical figures only three of whom — Heinrich Schutz, the whom — Heinrich Schütz, the author of Simplicissimus, and the original of Mother Courage — will be familiar to general readers outside Germany, The Meeting at Telgte might seen to enter the English language lacking much of the resonance it possesses for the German public, and the publishers have thoughtfully provided a Dramatis Personae for the distinctive literati who people its pages from Strasbourg, Königsberg, Nuremberg and elsewhere. Less sensitive is Leonard Forster's Afterword on the parallels and divergences between this notional meeting and the "Gruppe 47" set up in the ruins of the Second World War, to whose founder, Hans Werner whose founder, Hans Werner Richter, Grass dedicates the book. Forster keeps far too straight a face for The Meeting at Telgte.

"Gruppe 47" is a bit of a red berring, in fact. True, like their ectual successors 300 years later, Grass's group of 1647 gathers from all over Germany to salvage a national language and cultural identity from the corruption induced by disaster; like them, they eat, drink, quarrel, read and comment upon passages from each other's work; publishers, 100, scout its meetings to sniff out scout its meetings to sniff out the big names and the best-sellers for the coming peace. (So was The Tin Drum itself brought into the world). But while an awareness of all this will not spoil your enjoyment of The Meeting at Telgue, analogy is not the book's real game, and English readers, blissfully ignorant of, and undistracted by, the myopic chunderings that now as ever constrict the German literary scene, may German literary scene, may even be in a position to see its plain and simple design the more clearly. They will be aided by the mastery and elegance with which Ralph Manheim transmutes Grass's idiosyncratic tone of mind into English; even the occasional Germanic American verb ("Then the birds started in") seems apt.

The Meeting at Telgre is simply about being a writer in a disintegrating world — any and every kind of writer, from the ode-spinners of autocratic princes and authoritarian regimes to embowered precieux and those of indomitable brav-ery and faith. Writers are ery and faith. Writers are shown at their most opportun-ist, turning a moment of pain-into a perfect image and then luxuristing in their golft, and at their most selfless, as forces for reconciliation and necessary change, There are two heroes: Simon Dach, of Königsberg, who calls the original meeting, and Hans Jacob Christoffel von Grimmelshausen, of nowhere in particu-hausen, of nowhere in particu-lar and everywhere at once, a military fixer and imperial cowboy biding his time in order one day to write, despite the outrage and scorn of the assembled professionals, the assembled professionals, the Simplician cycle, the prose masterpiece of the Thirty Years War. They suggest respectively humanist enlightenment and Sturm und Drang, two quite opposing traditions of German creativity whose genius informs the book.

As literary scrap-dealer and rag-picker of Germany's first total war, Grimmelshausen is the greatest single influence on total war, Grimmelshausen is the greatest single influence on Günter Grass, who brilliantly effected a comparable sorcery with the second; The Meeting at Tegte pays back the debt with affection and honour. Grass devises Dach, a fellow East Prussian, as a kind of Hans Sachs in miniature, blessing the sexual pleasure of the young and drafting the manifesto to be sent to the peace conference in sent to the peace conference in Munster. On writers it is Dach who has the last word and offers the image which Grass himself illustrates on the jacket of the book:

No prince could equal them. Their riches could not be bought or sold. And even if they should be stoned and burned in hatred, a hand with a pen would rise out of the stone pile.

Of course, within minutes of of course, within minutes of their precariously attained resolution, the poets flee to the four corners of the Empire as the inn containing them goes up in flames, the manifesto and the thistle representing indestructible Germany with it. Like most of Grass's fiction, The Meeting at Telete no sooner establishes firm ground for an argument or an event to stand on than cracks flicker across the floor. He may have become more playful, but he is never cosy: he mocks, and even inexhaustible facility with metaphor, but he continues to revel in it, too. A metaphor contains memory, myth and meaning, with a power that goes beyond language itself and survives translation intact: The Meeting at Telgte flirts coolly with that al legge thris coolly with that power. The result is minor, but characteristic and virtuoso, Grass, and, more than any book he has written since Cat and Mouse, is brought off with an irresistible grace and charm.

Aldeburgh Festival Martti Talvela

Snape Maltings

One does not quite expect, and least of all at Aldeburgh, to hear Winterreise sung by a bass. But no doubt Martti Talvela was just as aware as his audience on Saturday of the unusualness of what he was taking on, and his overpowering success was due very much to his recognition that Schubert's cycle does not have to be dramatized; rather the racing pattern of thoughts and feelings has to be brought within the compass of the singer's personality, whatever his — or, indeed, her — range in terms of pitch. It is not a question of becoming the journeyer, but instead of exploring one's own resources, which in Mr Talvela's case are formidable.

Only in the first song and a half was I worned by so much lyric fervour coming from so low down, and that feeling of unease was due largely to the deeply engrained tradition that basses do not make young heroes — a specially unfortu-

Trio Mobile

Jubilee Hall

Every year, along with the church crawl and the ramble, there is a moment when the Aldeburgh Festival sets out on an excursion into some corner of the avant-garde. This year's slot in the programme was filled by a concert given by the Trio Mobile on Friday and received warmly and cheerfully, as the musicians described. musicians deserved. Although a trio consisting of electric guitar, accordion and percussion run the risk that all their pieces will sound equally strange and therefore pretty much the same, this Swedish group overcame the problem by including solos for each member. Even more profitably they concentrated on two composers, the Norwegian Arne Nordheim and the Dane Per Norgaard.

Of Norgaard we heard two works dating from around 1970, Waves for percussion solo and Arcana for trio, both of them much indebted to the minimal music then associated with the names of Terry Riley and Steve Reich. Norgaard was among the first European composers to be influenced by them, but already in these pieces the streamlined American approach was being subjected to a more traditional kind of purpose and shape.

nate tradition in view of the nate tradition in view of the lightness in the upper register, the perfectly managed mezza voce and the free, natural phrasing Mr Talvela achieved here. Of course these were features of his performance throughout, but the song about the cloud could almost have been designed to display just been designed to display just how much air and brightness a bass can find in his voice.

On the other hand Mr Talvela was spared by his range from the danger of ever seeming peevish or feeble in complaint. His hitterness was jet black, and did not need to be stressed, his exile was chosen and strong. And in drawing attention to the bass of the piano, where his accompanist Ralf Gothoni was as firm as he was imaginative in the treble, Mr Talvela empha-sized what is obsessive and compelled in the music: this wanderer seemed driven on by forces he invents and himself succours. At the end he reased himself with the prospect of death, smilingly dangled before both singer and audience, but one knew his travels were still far from over here below.

- Paul Griffiths

Both works make joyful play with simple patterns in mechan-ical repetition, but both are also developed through progressive phases and strongly urged. Though balance and determination were not enough to of these performances,

Somewhat more curious was a later piece by Norgaard, Hymn to Mary, a lute song for a solo performer. Ingolf Olsen gave this the sort of naive presentation that seemed to be expected, since the music leans less towards Dowland than towards the robust modality of the 13th century. But even so it was difficult to see any point in the thing. Nordheim, a less fluent and individual composer than Norgaard, was represented by a rather ordinary trio piece, Signals, and by a solo for accordion with tape, Dinoscurus, both of which functioned quite adequately as showpieces for the performers.

Indeed, so extraordinary were the sounds that Mogens Ellegaard discovered in the latter siece, so awesome the growling clusters and so scintillating the figuration, that I almost forgot they were coming from the most monstrous of musical good point. Andrew Wickes speaks Samiel's lines over a public address system in the auditorium, but he is also seen black face, which is right. .. Sandra Dugdale as Annchen, a charmer in the ingenue stakes, with intelligence that enhances the virtues of a well-schooled soprano. Both arias were delightfully sung. Promises and perils of originality

A programme ranging from the pre-baroque to experimental music-theatre ensured a stimulating Holland Festival, but, most arguments have been excited not by excursions into mechanted territories but by the Netherlands Opera productions, at the Amsterdam Stadsschouw-burg, of two established corner-

Amsterdam had not seen Parsifal for 48 years, and for the Wagnerian purist Goran Järvefelt may have strayed too far from tradition: For others, myself among them, his treat-ment was warm and illumi-nating. The designs of Carl nating. The designs of Carl Friedrich Oberle were realistic, and against them Järvefelt unfolded a Parsifal that was deliberately factual and humanized. If some of the mystery disappeared, the gain in clarification must have been considerable for the control of able for audiences containing many who were seeing Wagner's sacred festival drama for

the autumnal sadness of the opening, crocuses pushing through the snow signified promise when Parsifal returned, the tackiness of Montsalvat in Act III under-lined growing disillusionment, dispelled at Parsifal's cry of "Sei heil". So determined was Järvefelt that all mankind should seem to derive hope from it that even Klingsor and his cohorts shared in redemp-

Montsalvat's Knights were Franciscans, Klingsor's fol-lowers balletic young upstarts, rather than seductively so. Yet the work's spirituality was constantly in focus, even sharpened by the surroundings in which it was found. For this, a musical performance of radi ance and truth takes much credit. Less beautifully played, this Parsifal might have tilted just a little too far. As it was, it achieved convincing totality.

From the start of the prelude it was clear that Edo de Waart and the Rotterdam Philbarmonic would give something exceptional and, as the evening progressed, the theatre filled with playing that was luminous and profoundly expressive, pain and ecstasy both sensitively

Parsifal grew steadily, Elizabeth Robert Lloyd at his excellent Connell was instinctively aware of Kundry's duality and "Ich sah das Kind" was muched with whispered visions. The agony of Ulrik Cold's consistently sustained Amfortas and the menace of Henk Smit's Klingsor fitted well into a production so concerned with the positive. The chorus was superb. Dramatically and musically, however, the centrepiece was Gurnemanz, through whom Jarvefelt expressed much of his approach. Since the singer was Four towering arc-lights, common to the prison court-yard, Florestan's deep cell and the parade ground, suggested that it was all taking place outside a football ground, an impression heightened by the outside a football ground, an impression heightened by the referee's whistle announcing Pizarro's arrival. The prisoners raced on stage with an exuberance remarkable for people who bore visible evidence of having been half-started and beaten up, been half-started and beaten up, then setled down to "Oh welche Lust", guards chased each other in ever-decreasing circles and Jacquino looked tike a sadistic Nazi railway inspector who would have the fingernails off you if he caught you travelling with an out-of-date season ticket.

Marcellina seemed not so much in love with Fidelio as understandably terrified of the alternative. What we saw too often conflicted with the sentiments expressed in the words.

Disregarding the sight-lines of the theatre in which he was working, Kupfer placed Florestan and the rescue episode in a corner where it was invisible to a section of the audience (I saw Illines of the section of the audience (I saw Illines and the rescue episode in a corner where it was invisible to a section of the audience (I saw Illines and the rescue episode in a corner where it was invisible to

The musical performance was undistinguished, though the anonymity of Lisbeth Balslev's Leonora no doubt derived in part from the production. To add to the embarrassment, Hans Bonk often failed to ensure synchronization between stage and pit (the Radio Philharmonic).

This is a joint production with the Welsh National, and in passion, resigned in grey age, a warm humanity rooted in things earthly but within sight of the spiritual revelation. Lloyd's rich singing and intensely involved the massive September it will be seen in Cardiff, where no doubt it will be better sung, acted, played and conducted. But one wonders what can be done to make the production acceptable.

Wigmore Hall

"Who on earth is that fat sow?" inquired Casanova, on the appearance of a stout, bejewelled woman at the Paris opera. "She is the wife of the fat pig", replied her husband. The work from which they were momentarily distracted was Campra's Les fêtes venitiennes, an air from which we heard on Friday in a programme of music and reading celebrating the life of Casanova.

Under the name of Eupolemo Pantaxeno, Casanova was him-self a member of the original self a member of the original Accademia Arcadiana, formed to continue the patronizing work of ex-Queen Christine of Sweden for whom Alessandro Scarlatti wrote his cantata Bella madre dei fiori. One of its arias, "Vanne, o caro", sung with elegant artistry and sprightly articulation by Sally Bradshaw, was one of the few. Bradshaw, was one of the few epicure dishes in an interminable banquet of canapes. Another was her "Non so piu", from Figaro (did Mozart meet Casanova at a party in 1787?), stylishly accompanied in Mozart's own delightfully fanci. ful arrangement by a 1797 violin (Elizabeth Hunt), a 1750 cello (Jane Ryan) and a full, sweet-toned 1795 fortepiano played by Courtney Kenny. He was re-placing Nicolas McGegan, who had just had his thumb bitten by a Great Dane in Dijon. It was Mr Kenny's fluent.

in aginative playing, too, that made so absorbing the group's performance of J. C. Bach's Sonata No. Op 2, written for a series of concerts at the London home of one of Casanova's old flames. Other similarly associared contemporary musical fragments diverted, but were in the end drowned by the flood of title-tattle recited by Charles Metcalfe with appropriately posturing coyness and listened to with a degree of attention that would doubtless have flattered the old roue, absorbed as he so deeply was in his dotage with the remembrance and recording of every technus detail of his rather unexceptional temps perdu.

Every year the BBC receives. hundreds of letters complaining about the declining standard of English usage on the air. Many urge the corporation to do something positive to help put things

The BBC is now taking at least one small step in the right direction. For the past six months or so it has allowed Professor David Crystal, of the Department of Linguistic Science at Reading University, to go through the letters as they Linguistic

From them Professor Crystal has compiled a Top Twenty of complaints which will be broad-cast, with his comments, on Radio Four next month. At the top of the list is the incorrect use of the words "I" and "me" in such phrases as "you and I" and "you and me". Next, where to put the stress on words such as "controversy" and "research".

At number three, whether "none", "a number" and similar words and phrases should take a singular or plural verb; four, references to words and phrases of American origin; five the right way to pronounce foreign words such as Kabul (a subject aired in these columns); and six, split infinitives (to go boldly, not to boldly go). Running on down the list people worry about whether it should be different to ", "different than " or " different from ", and most insist on the latter; at No 8 is more grammar—should it be I wish I was or I wish I were? At nine is the knotty problem of whether regionally distinctive pronunciations are acceptable (the word poor crops up several times).

Halfway; cliches such as by and large and at the end of the day infortate. At 11 is the dropping by announcers of specific vowels and consonants: Antartic instead of Antarctic; Febry instead of February. February..

Professor Crystal places at No 12 the clear distinction that people want made between the meanings of easily confusible words: iminterested/disinterested, rich/affluent; 13, sgain grammatical—whether or not to end a sentence with a preposi-tion; 14, should one use " who" or "whom" in sentences such as "Who were you talking to?"; 15, how colloquial should speech be—is "quid" permitted for "pound"?

Sixteenth place goes to now commonly accepted emphemisms the language. Do unions really "go on strike" or "take indus-trial action"? At 17, pronunciation again: what do you do with "r" when a vowel follows with "I" when a vower tonows—is it drawing or drawing?; 18, again grammatical, is when to use "shall " and " will "; 19, should words be allowed to run into each others as in "las".

And, finally, the omission of important parts of sentences. Is it shoppy to say "Over to John Smith when more correctly, if pedantically, it should be "I now pass you over to John Smith ?

The questions hang in the air; Professor Crystal examines them in detail and you will have to listen to the broadcast to find out what he thinks. What he does say now is that today's real linguistic problems will not be solved by the fury unleashed against split infini tives or prepositional placings. On the contrary, he says, there is a danger that the real problems will be missed because of the inordinate focus of attention on these old shibboleths of linguistic usage.

In the meantime ... "Dear ir, I was shocked to hear during the 8 am broadcast Brian Redhead refer to one of the major roads on which there was traffic congestion as being bunged up? I ask you!"

certainties greater. So only now is the full significance of the consequences of the attempt on the Pope's life beginning to be understood. The hope is strong that John Paul II will be active again after the current treatment and some months of rest; one esti-mate of persons near him is that he will need at least a year.

However, no forecast can be accurately made because too many influences bear on his ability to recover. Before the Pope was readmit-ted to hospital, rumours of a relapse were officially denied: at the Varican. The Pope's injuries were serious but the operation performed immediately after the shooting was considered a success and it was also hoped that he had escaped the danger of infection. He nevertheless left hospital to return to the Vatican earlier, on June 3—than his doctors The Pope is clearly a diffi-

His decision would have been justified only if the psycho-logical stimulus of going home had been evident. There were rumours of stomach pains and inability to eat, and reports that he has little appetite. After a few days back at the Vatican; the Pope's temperature rose and it is said, an infection showed in the lungs, not in the intestine, where the opera-

There could of course be no hiding John Paul II's illness. because the world knew that he had been badly wounded. Yet the Varican insisted on making the misguided effort of minimizing the real portent of the shooting: he was in a sense in St Peter's Square even while lying on a hospital bed because his voice had been recorded and played over loudspeakers. "The Pope is present" is one of the phrases used by Vatican-Radio which is now immortalized in the tape on sale under the title The attempt on the Pope's life. It was known after he had appeared briefly at his window on the Sunday after his return from hospital that the effort first of recording a prayer then standing at his window exhausted him. The natural attitude would have been to admit from the beginning that the Pope's health was such that he would need a long period of quiet, rather than straining to show that, gun wounds or not, life was going on almost normally for the simple pilgrim. The shooting put the Pope out of action when he had more to do than at any moment in his reign.

The Polish crisis worsened and the death of Cardinal Wyzsyuski was a personal blow to the Pope. It gave rise to a the revolution. The appoint-fresh problem, which he is not ment could have been made fit to face, of whom he should only with the tacit agreement choose to be the next primate of the Communist Chinese of his own country.

China, too, needs the Pope's before agreed to the nominof his own country.

The euphoria was short lived: the Association of Patriotic Catholics in China criticized the appointment and now the Peking Government has said Vatican.

The Pope had already been shot when the results were known of Italy's referendum on abortion; the vote heavily against the Catholic position; to oppose the abortion law. directives on what should be done are necessary but will not be forthcoming. In the more worldly words of western diplomat accredited to the Holy See: "They badly need a success." But the mach-inery cannot operate properly without an active Pope. There is no deputy Pope. John Paul II alone has full powers and even if he felt like delegating, he could pass ordinary administra-tion only to another prelate.

The aging Paul VI had an efficient and loyal servant— Monsignor Giovanni Benelli, now Cardinal-Archbishop of Florence—but John Paul II has no comparable aide.

The Pope made his own decisions within his partly Polish inner circle and ignored many of the departments of the Curia altogether. One Curia official who is by no means over-critical who is by no means over-critical of the Pope was asked if the present situation was similar to that between the death of a Pope and the election of a new one, the interregnum known as sede vacante. His reply was:

"For many of us in the Curia there has been a sede vacante." there has been a sede vacante ever since John Paul II was elected."

John Paul II before the attack on his life depended on his own dynamism to give character to his reign. He chose as his Cardinal Secretary of State not a brilliant mours of paper as was brilliant mover of paper, as was Benelli, but Benelli's rival under Paul VI Agostino Casaroli, who is highly respected but is not a forceful character and thus is too cautious about overstepping exact lines of competence.

This dynasty of John Paul's so far dramatically unlucky. He first captured the hearts of the world in a matter of days and was in spectacular full flight when he was shot. The weaknesses behind the façade were certainly there and are only now appearing; the assail-ant brufally if involuntarily revealed them.

Now the problem is a double one. First, to give the Pope a chance to recover his strength even if this is unlikely to mean that he will return to the vigour that marked his earlier reign, or be allowed ever again to be as free as he was in mixing with the crowds. And second, to find, for the time being, some way to give the Church's admin-istration the capacity to deal with mounting difficulties.

This is the real lesson of the deeply sad enforced inactivity of John Paul II which no amount of recording tape can Membership is a third of what it was. Yet this has been assumed to be due to betrayals by Labour governments rather than the inevitable decline of mass parties in an affluent society. The answers should have been to reach out to enrol minimal involvement and low subscriptions, then to use up-todate techniques of fund-raising as parties overseas and mass pressure groups have done.

Instead we opted for elitism by high subscriptions, a van-guard role for the party in determining policy and a frame-work of delegate democracy. All this was an activist's charter nor a formula for a mass party: indeed it was unattractive to many traditional sup-porters and to ordinary electors. Division, organizational pedantry and counter-productive em-bittering argument are well calculated to put people off, not attract them.

Worse still, reasonable premises were pushed to doctrinaire conclusions. Party members should have a right to get rid of an MP who isn't up to the tob as decorously as possible.

Instead they were forced to challenge someone they wanted to keep. Other socialists involve the party outside Parliament in choosing the party leader. This became a reason to give out-siders the overwhelming share. Many party members want a say in policy though equally many don't care. This became a demand that an unrepresentative conference and an even more unrepresentative National Executive should control it.

Each distortion is electorally disastrous. Mandatory reselec-tion goes beyond a seemly pro-cedure for garbage disposal. It legitimates opposition and intrigue within each constituency party. It encourages and heightens left-right conflict.

Our party, which already has to overcome a government majority of 70 and a certain loss of some score of seats thanks to constituency bound-ary changes, has been rushed into casually assuming another

The leadership system is even more of a liability. The trade unions are unpopular and yet we have handed them the dominant role in electing the Labour leader. Their decisionmaking processes are cumbersome and inequitable. So we have rushed to ask them to choose between personalities, something they have no machinery to do. Leadership fights can embittering. So we have made them public protracted and nationwide. We have also made them divisive and emotive in a way they could never be before. The most dismaying factor of the present fight (over, be it noted, the non-job of deputy leader) is the intense explosion the party of fraternity. This is partly because of an invellectual distrust of Tony Beon with his perennial tendency to include seven-pound notes among his genuine fivers and his apparent desire to be a cut-price Bevan getting the same glory without the gore or the guts. However, the great weight of the bitter reaction is due to his critiques of past Labour governments and the Shadow Cabinet, all of which affront dignity and history. Yet all this is really forced on him by the rules under which the election is fought. Any candidate incapable of getting a majority of the Parliamentary Labour Party must Conference is confusing; lastyear it lumbered the party with contradictory resolutions on multilateral and unilateral disarmament and then compounded the problem by voting (this time by card vote with a massive majority) to stay in Nato. It is unrepresentative: Political Quarterly shows that in 1978 constituency delegates were overwhelmingly middle class, public sector employed and well out of line with Labour voters on most of their views. It is undemocratic: the block vote can be justified only by viewing it as a ballast for stability. Yet now it is not even that, because the unions themselves are becoming unmanageable.

Once the union bosses could deliver the block votes. Now the activists have the cards. Neither is democratic. Neither is repre-

Building up conference as the central organ of party democracy means ignoring its glaring inadequacies as a source of policies. Compounding this by regarding the NEC as the custodian of its conscience makes it certain that Labour. will then be lumbered with apolicy on which no same perty could ever win. MPs may be a interest. All this has been done in the name of objectives un-attainable in the first place. Democratization is impossible in a cumbersome and undemocratic structure. Union domi nance means that change which does not benefit them is ruled out. A vanguard role is merely offputting for Britain's undereducated, ill-informed and non-ideological electorate.

Meanwhile the socialism in the name of which all this is being done is ruled out by it. Anyone who wants as I do to build a socialist society, to get Britain out of the EEC, to begin the huge task of indus-trial reconstruction must now ask themselves whether the prospect of achieving power to do all this is helped or hindered by a machine which actually stands in the way of socialism.

RISKS OF THE CHINA CARD

The Soviet Union has reacted cism of the value of nego- and the Russians played out the with predictable nervous animosity to the revelation that its sufficiently well-informed to can demonology. But it would missile tests are being monitored by the United States from Chinese territory. It has accused the Chinese of becoming voluntary agents of imperialist intelligence services. It has also criticized America's new policy on arms sales to China. Although it claims to be less worried for itself than for Asian nations against which these weapons are, it says, to be used, it sent its ambassador in Washington, Mr Dobrynin, to protest to the State Department.

These reactions cannot be shrugged off simply as a product of the nervous reflex which afflicts the Russians whenever China is mentioned, particularly when there is any sign of military cooperation between western nations and China. The situation is new for the Russians because they do not know where they stand with Washington. When President Nixon reopened relations with China after the long freeze the Russians did not exactly rejoice but they were reassured by words and deeds from Washington that this was not intended to be the start of a new military alliance against them. They could understand America's reasons for wanting normal relations with China because they were reasonably secure in the knowledge that Washington's top priority was detente with them, Even through the ups and downs of relations with President Carter they could see that America's China policy was not being used against them.

With President Reagan, they can no longer be sure. They know that the new Administration is imbued with a pro-found emotional distrust of the Soviet Union and a deep scepti-in Mr Reagan's Administration and west, and especially to the who believe in using the "China card" to put pressure on the Soviet Union.

It would also matter in the Like everyone else they do not know who will ultimately shape Mr Reagan's east-west policies but they are bound to see the visit of Mr Haig to Peking and the new American willingness to sell arms to China as evidence that the balance is swinging towards those whom they most distrust.

Unfortunately they are right to be worried. Mr Reagan's Administration has shown no signs of having the wisdom and sensitivity needed to conduct balanced relations with both Moscow and Peking. It is dangerously fascinated by the idea that if only it can show itself stronger than the Soviet Union it will be able to dictate terms. This is an illusion. If the Soviet Union comes to believe that the United States is entering into serious military cooper-ation with China it will become not more amenable but less so. It will have no reason at all to cut its defence spending because it will feel menaced on two fronts. It will become less interested in talking about arms control with the Americans because it will fear that agreements could be circumvented through China. It will have one reason less for not intervening in Poland because it will have less to lose in its relations with the West.

Perhaps none of this matters much to the more right-wing people in Washington. Some of them would probably welcome a neatly bi-polar world in which good and evil, friends and enemies, were clearly defined know that there are some people matter to the Europeans of east

It would also matter in the long run to the United States. Soviet Union remains, and will remain for a long time, the principal global rival to the United States and the western alliance. It is the Soviet Union, not Chinz, that points its nuclear arsenal in our direction. It is the Soviet Union, not China, that confronts our interests around the globe. It is with the Soviet Union, not China, that we share the European continent in precarious balance. It is, therefore, with the Soviet Union that we have to do business directly in order to lessen the dangers inherent in this relationship. Western re-lations with China are neither a substitute for relations with the Soviet Union nor a means of improving them. They should be conducted sensibly for their own sake. It may be tactically useful from time to time to let the Soviet Union know that the west has friends on its other border but the "China card" as such is not for playing. It assumes that the Chinese are willing to be servants of our interests, which is risky. It is also liable to have effects precisely opposite to those intended, making the Soviet Union even more difficult to do business with than it is already. Even worse dangers were envisaged by Dr Kissinger in his memoirs: "Any move by us to play the China card might tempt the Soviets to end their nightmare of hostile powers on two fronts by striking out in one direction before it was too late . . . Equilibrium was the name of the game".

THE NEED FOR NEW LABOUR LAWS

Industry is the largest organization of employers in the country. What it has to say about labour relations represents the case for the prosecution in terms of the adversarial model of British industry. After the passage of the Employment Act, the CBI showed a distinctly weaker appetite for further legislation than some politicians, a difference reflecting pragmatic caution rather than satiation. Now that the CBI comes to make its comments on Mr Prior's green paper it finds several issues where immediate changes would be desirable, as well as more fundamental questions to be grappled with later. The former category consists mainly of proposals developing the approach of the Employ-ment Act a little further, or remedying shortcomings in it that have already become discernible during its short life. It would be absurd for opponents to represent it as a bloodthirsty list of exactions designed to humiliate the labour movement at a moment when its industrial such approach would be misconceived, for the ultimate success of legislation in this field depends on its political acceptability, and the mouths of and redundancies have made it not easier but more difficult for the Government to find that measure of bipartisan. support (or at least acquiescence behind a façade of loud indignation) which last year's Act evoked with some success. The CBI's watchword of gradual but steady change in step with

The fifth proposal is that strikes for mainly political purposes should be denied the usual immunities. Desirable as this might be in principle, it raises almost insur-mountable problems of definition, especially in the public-sector, and would require judgto make highly political decisions.

The report does not discuss the need to enable employers to: lay off their employees without pay if a minority are on strike. Where a few workers in strategic positions can threaten the whole fate of a company the more clearly the uninvolved majority see that their interests lie with a quick settlement the deep division over the role of the closed shop. After all, there would be no such thing if some employers had not found it advantageous. But it is notable that while the Royal Com-mission of 1968 received no serious evidence urging the outright abolition of the closed shop that option does have significant support today. Events of recent years have made the oppressive tendencies of the practice more obvious, British industrial relations: the fact that many of our problems arise because our unions are not too strong but too weak. Most strikes are unofficial, often small but immeasurably damaging to regularity and efficiency Undemocratic as it is, the closed shop sometimes makes for stability in practice. Often, however, it exists with all its defects even though the union has virtually lost control of internal discipline. In this con-text, there are great attractions in one proposal the CBI puts forward for later consideration: the possibility that unions should be made accountable for torts committed by their members unofficially or in defiance of procedure, unless the union has made reasonable efforts to control them. It is all part of the paradox, of course, that the unions would resist with great passion any move to strengthen them in this way; but it would bring a fundamental improve

The CBI's membership is diverse. There is evidence of

Is it the end for Benn's high ambition?

Donkey's years ago, E. V. Lucas, of Punch, wrote an elegant minor novel called And Mr. Wyke Bond. Some of it stays in the mind when much of nobler note has passed away.

Wyke Bond was a nobody with ambitions to cut a figure in society, and he hit upon a rose to contrive it.
Toppered and tailed, he never missed a big wedding at St Margaret's, Westminster, or St George's, Hanover Square, or a memorial service anywhere for men of mark and name. At last, every list of guests or mourners on the Court pages of quality papers ended with the words "and Mr. Wyke Bond", and nobody could be decently buried or married in his absence, if only because it would resound as a comment on the family's social status or acceptability.

Wyke Bond persists in coming. unseasonably to mind whenever I feel an inescapable duty to join in a memorial service for a politician, because he opens up a line of escape from all the oppressive thoughts of outstanding girs, energy, vivacity, charm or perhaps endearing am-bition in public service that we shall never see again mixed to quite the same recipe. Wyke Bond distracts the mind from the ills that the flesh of politicians, it seems to me, is peculiarly heir to. In the political trade nearly always the body lets down the inextinguishable spirit; and when the body begins to jib, there may be no telling what will happen to a politician's predicted career or even. to repercussions on his party's destiny. No need to turn back the pages of history, it has happened in our time. Would Attlee, himself less than fit, have dissolved Parliament in 1951 if Ernest Bevin and Stafford Cripps had not died under the burdens they carried through and beyond the War? If either Gaitskell or Beyon had lived longer, would Harold Wilson ever have become Opposition Leader, and then prime minister? Leader, and then prime minister?

On the Conservative side, from 1951 onwards, there was the painful and sometimes visible decay of Winston Churchill, until in the end the former Chief Whip James Stuart, who worshipped him, and was worshipped in return, drew the chart trans that the great man. was worshipped in return, drew the short straw to tell the great man that the time had come for him to go. Churchill lingered on in the Commons as a backbencher, until he had to be brought to the Bar in a wheelchair, into which he would be lifted after brandies in the smoking

One of his lifelong admirers describes how Churchill had the smell of death upon him, and his eyes moisten as he tells it. He fastidiously adds that he went straight away and washed his hands.

Then the strain of No. 10 soon Then the strain of No 10 soon broke Eden as prime minister, in circumstances for which his whole public life appeared to have pre-pared him. Harold Macmillan, made of tougher Highland fibre, lasted six years before his health cheated him in October, 1963, although even in February of that year senior officers of the 1922 Committee visited Lord Home to ask if he would make himself available. Out of Home's controversial choice in October probably came the lost general election of 1964, and the balloting for, rather than the "emergence" of the party leader first Edward Heath and then Margaret Thatcher, both rather untypical Conservative commanders-in-chief.

Another breakdown of health significant for the Conservative Party must certainly have been that of Iain Macleod. Within a week or two of becoming Chancellor of Exchequer in 1970, he went into hospital with what looked like simple appendicitis; and he died the night he arrived back at 11, Downing Street. No Conservative now believes that party history would have run unchanged if he had

Mr. Heath might not have made some of what later seemed to be misreadings of party mood, and Sir

Keith Joseph would not have established himself as the guru of disenchanted backbenchers. disenchanted backbenchers.

It is impossible to pursue the theme without thinking of Tony Benn. (The Daily Telegraph and Bill Deedes, its editor, by the way, did themselves much credit by printing a leading article notable for its sensitivity and generosity, full of House of Commons spirit.) I know nothing of Mr. Benn's physical ailment; I never heard of it before he had it. But, claiming him as a friend in spite of our many differences, I wish him well, and hope that his recovery will be complete:

ment in accountability.

Nevertheless, candour exacts its due. No politician may be struck down by serious illness and then continue as though nothing has happened, and even if the politician thinks nothing has happened, his friends and enemies will believe something has happened. Mr. Benn's recovery may medically be eventually complete; but there will e two factors. First, Mr. Benn's own physical confidence may be undermined by illness, like many ambitious politicians before him. Secondly, at the autumn horse fair for deputy party leader and then for leader, the bidding will now go on the fitter nimals. In other words, Mr Benn's misfortune may all too easily alter-the course of Labour Party history. We have circumstances in which Michael Foot is not credible as an Opposition leader who, even if he won the next General Election, could lead the Labour Party as prime minister for more than a very short time, until he retired early in

It follows that the election of Labour's deputy Leader even though deputy leaders have not usually made their way to the top, will be nothing less than the choice of the man who will be popularly regarded as the next Labour prime minister. Tony Benn, it must be faced, is now nearly unmarketable, he has been broken even if only temporarily. broken, even if only temporarily. That leaves Denis Healey, the toughest of them all, and the most experienced, and John Silkin, the subtlest of them all, and probably one of the richest. They, and Mr Wyke Bond, must take their choice.

Of course, I share his contempt for the "hindsight industry" and I do not doubt that many, many officers worked above and beyond the call of duty to try and bring Sutcliffe's reign of terror to an end. But there are legitimate reasons for public concern about the more theatrical aspects of police behaviour immedi-ately after Sutcliffe's arrest. There is also the need for a dispassionate examination of police methods now that we do have the benefit of hindsight. This is not to put the police on trial but to learn lessons for the future. Those lessons will best be learnt if Chief Constable Gregory and his force put them in a more constructive and less defensive frame of mind. Yours sincerely,

US attitude on Time for second thoughts on planning

From Professor Sir Colin Buchanan Sir, On September 15 next, a public inquiry is due to start into the application by the British Airports Authority for permission to undertake the first stage of a large development of Stansted Airport. There are associated major road proposals of the Department of Transport. The Authority, encouraged by the Government, is also to seek the safeguarding of additional land which will enable the airport to be further expanded to nearly twice the physical size of Heating. A massive development is in the offing, with far-reaching consequences for an area which has been kept open by planning policies consistently applied over many vears. Opposition of the most formidable kind is now being mounted against the proposal. This includes four county councils (Herts, Essex, Cambridgeshire and Suffolk — no mean adversaries), a large number of District councils, statutory agencies such as the Countryside Commission and the Anglian Water

A great many voluntary bodies have entered the lists; the National Trust, the National Farmers' Union, the Country Landowners' Association, the Ramblers' Association, the Council for the Protection of Rural England, and (as important as any) the local people themselves in the form of over 200 parish councils and local associations who have come together under the North West Essex and East Hertfordshire Preservation Association. I could go on listing other groups, such as the Town and Country Planning Association, who have submitted (as they are entitled to do) a formal planning application for the development of Maplin. This has been accepted as valid and if there is opposition, as there is bound to be, a public inquiry will be required.

There is an extraordinary conflict There is an extraordinary conflict of opinion in the aviation camp. British Airways, by far the greatest user of Heathrow Airport, has issued a strong criticism of the arguments of the Airports Authority, submitting that foreseeable needs for the London area can be met by providing a fifth terminal at Heathrow at far lower capital and operating costs and without increasing aircraft movement numbers or ing aircraft movement numbers or noise. (This cause has been es-poused by Essex and Herifordshire County Councils in their anxiety to defeat the Stansted proposal, and also by Uttlesford District Council, in whose area Stansted lies, who have now submitted, as they are entitled to do, a formal application for the development of a lifth terminal at Heathrow. If there is opposition, as there is bound to be, then a public inquiry—will—be required.

What is even more disturbing is the attitude displayed by the Confederation of British Industry. Box, Minchinhampton,

From Captain S. W. Roskill Sir, I have so far (not without some difficulty) restrained myself from joining in the correspondence about the future of the Royal Navy — partly because the full facts were not yet known to me, and partly because some of the wilder press statements obviously had to be discounted. But with the moment of truth upon us I can no longer continue my policy of self-restraint.

For over 30 years I have produced historical works and have lectured up and down the country to the effect that the function of the Navy has nothing to do with concepts such as "defence of sea lanes" or "sea communications," but to protect the merchant ships and their gallant crews on whom the life blood of these islands and of the blood of these islands and of the whole Western Alliance depends; and I have pointed out the appalling cost of our failure to fulfil that function in recent times until almost too late. Yet the old heresy continues to appear in ministerial and press statements.

Are we really to believe that protection of the merchant ships and their crews can be achieved by a handful of attack submarines and of shore-based aircraft? And incidenshore-based aircraft? And incidentally can those instruments rescue the crews of sunk ships? Are all the lessons of 1917 and of 1942-43 when we were brought to the brink of defeat and surrender by attacks on our merchant shipping of no account today? And why should the Soviets launch a nuclear attack and sink restlication in kind on launch a risk retaliation in kind, or launch a land attack in western Europe, when merely by sinking our merchant navy they can bring us to our knees in a few weeks. I realize that Mr Nott was still a school boy in 1945; but might he not have studied some of the books published on the foregoing subjects since he achieved manhood? Certainly he does not appear to have done so. And now we read that some of the Royal Navy's ships are to be offered for sale in the armament bargain basements of the world — while the excessively numerous and grossly overmanned Royal Dock-yards are to remain relatively intact — obviously because, as in the 1920s when the same matter was mooted, they command more electoral votes.

Could folly go further than to destroy both the material and the morale of the service which has twice in this century been the chief means of saving this country from starvation and defeat? Mrs Thatcher bas cismissed a junior Minister who had the courage to warn the nation of what was in train. If she and her advisers believe that I and thousand of others with first hand experience of the price paid in thips, money and lives through the blindness of our leaders in between the wars will again vote for her party at the next General Election they are living in cloud cuckoo land — as my own correspondence makes quite clear. After all Mr Callaghan and a number of his ministers aid have the experience which appears to be so sadly lacking on the Government front bench today: and I do not believe that, even in the pressing financial and economic conditions of today, they would have permitted the measures which those in office appear to be about to approve. Yours faithfully, STEPHEN W. ROSKILL,

Birthdays today

Hope in Ulster from experience of suffering day."

During his recent visit to Belfast, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Robert Runcie, referred in a sermon to the signs of hope amid the darkness he had perceived in a new book on the Irish troubles, and he has since been commending the book to English readers.

It is Profiles of Hope by the Belfost Telegraph journalist, Alf McCreary in which the author, drawing on his own and other people's personal percep-tions, sets out both the cruelty and the courage that the every day experience of suffering has visited upon many in the population of Northern Ireland.

It is a simple formula, letting the people concerned speak for themselves, and the result is not so much a flowing narrative, more a series of arresting moments from flashes of insight and self-revelation. Some of the contributors are from among the simple bereaved folk of Northern Ireland, who found their lives suddenly shot to pieces when one of their own kin fell victim to a casual act of murder by one or other side. One such woman, indistinguishable in a worldn, indistinguishable in a crowd, tells how she fights her own campaign against terror-ism, "I feel that I am winning a victory over the murderers' as stronger, better persons."

From whatever religious tradition they came, their faith seemed to add both to their suffering and to their gradual release from it, which, if a valid metaphor for the role of religion in Northern Ireland generally is grounds for an anguished sort of optimism. The contribution of religion to the conflict is not shirked in this book; but the buried message below the text is that if religion is part of the problem, it will have to be part of the solution too. In small ways, is beginn to appear how this it begins to appear how this might be so.

In 1963 her husband, Carl died and the Reiniger radiance vanished behind a cloud for several years. But during the last 10 years she had emerged from a period of isolation to find herself saluted as one of the last survivors of a golden age of cinema, a film-maker of exceptional talent and a woman with an infectious personality.

At the 1972 Berlin Film Fesrival she was honoured with the Deutsche Film Prize the Golden Film Strip (Das Band von Gold) "for her long years and exceptional work for the German cinema". Two years later she was invited by the National Film Board of Canada to make her first film for its National Film Soard of Canada to make her first film for 12 years, Aucassin and Nicolette. The resulting 16-minute carioon won a special jury prize at the Ottawa 1976 International Animals of the Particular Canada Silm Feerings.

Ottawa 1976 International Animated Film Festival.

Afterwards, Miss Reiniger embarked on a hectic series of lecture tours across America and in Turkey, Norway, Germany and England, She was an inspiration to those who dare to defy the years to defy the years.

She was awarded the Cross of the Order of the Federal Republic of Germany in 1979 "for services to the film world". Her charm, taleur and dedication remained undiminished even at the age of 79, when she made her last film. The Rose and the Ring, a 24-minute cartoon based on a superminute cartoon based on a story by Thackeray, in Montreal The film had its European première screening last year at Barnet Festival, her home town for the last 30 years, which paid homage to the legendary lady living in their midst-Lotte Reiniger described her self variously as "a well-self variously as "a well-uphoistered old trouper" and "a primitive cave man artist". She was also a Peter Pan of the cinema who charmed everyone with her larger than life passion for fairytales and story-telling. Her films carried the art of silhouette cutting into a new dimension. It is scarcely stretching things to say that they were the most mitable thing to happen to silhouettes since the 18th century. Late Reiniger was truly cut out for fame. Her eyes, her imaginative. genius and a pair of scissors were all she needed. The world has lost a unique talent as well as a lovable lady.

New peso devaluation feared

Despite Argentina's 30 per cent devaluation of its currency three weeks ago, the peso took a fresh hammering last week which cost the country's shaky reserves a further $600m

Another devaluation of 25 per cent before the end of the wonth is expected by some speculators. However, Dr Lorenzo Sigaut, the Finance Minister, is adamant that the policy of gradual devaluation of six per cent per month will con-tinue to the end of July at

The country's present dil-emma was summed up by a former minister who said: "If former minister who said: "If interest rates fall the country loses its reserves, if they keen their present level it loses its demand remain elusive.

Companies expect little change in production levels in the next four months, during which many industries will be affected by annual holidays. The Confederation of British Industry's latest monthly trends survey, published today, confirms that while the recession may have flattened out, companies expect low levels of output to continue.

Sterling's recent weakness against the United States dollar against the United States dollar (although not against the basker of European currencies) has not so far filtered through reindustry's export order books and although companies have continued to run down their stocks of finished goods, overall stock levels remain at historically high levels.

The CBI's survey, covering almost 2,000 companies in manufacturing industry, contains one heavily qualified brighter note. Although 70 percent of companies consider their present orders are below normal. normal, 5 per cent indicate they are above normal and 24 per cent cite them as " pormal "." CBI economists say that orders may have improved very slightly since last autumn.

Export order books have followed a similar pattern to total order books with 7 per total order books with 7 per cent of companies reporting above normal export orders and 58 per cent below normal.

It is clear from the latest survey results that further destocking will take place during the next few months, even though companies have been reducing their stocks of finished goods progressively in the past year. How that bastion of the Scottish cooperative movement, the Scottish Co-operative Wholesale Society (SCWS), collapsed financially in 1973 is clearly spelled out in this book by two Strathclyde academics.

W. D. Rubinstein has set out to make a comprehensive study of the rich in Britain since the Industrial Revolution, and his book is packed with statistical tables.

It is, however rather like a Government White Paper, or a telephone directory — full of valuable information but not easy to read.

Having taken up some 240 pages with analysis of probate records and other sources, throwing in a little bit of social history now and then, the author comes to three main conclusions: that the very rich tend to be very conservative, that the British economy has prevented them from becoming quite as rich as some Americans and that they are a very diverse lot.

These conclusions are by no means surprising, nor are they The story is very relevant to the movement's present prob-lems, as the struggle goes on to reconcile business efficiency with democratic control. It is with democratic control. It is also full of ironies, beginning with the little appreciated fact that the first organized con-sumer cooperative societies were in Scotland.

The problems of the Scottish society in the last five years of its life provide familiar reading for anybody following today's difficulties within the movement. Competition grew, in-creased labour costs made the switch to larger units more urgent; more mobile customers preferred shopping in larger

An industry slow to surface

British Industry and the North Sea By Michael Jenkin

The oil glut on world markets, the Government's "take" of oil company revenues from North Sea production and the decision by the British National Oil Corporation to cut North Sea-crude prices, have occupied much public attention in the

That is perhaps inevitable given the influence which oil exerts on all our lives. What many of us tend to forget is that the North Sea, unlike the Middle East, is a very young oil province and it was only in the mid-sixties that the first really serious commercial exploration for oil in the British sector of the North Sea developed any beneath the waves, indifference to the implications of the exploration effort descended over the media, Whitehall and ministers.

It is into this period, and that which followed, that Michael Jenkin has delved in order to trace the development of British government policy towards the offshore supplies industry now. offshore supplies industry now recognized to be a vital compoment of the national economy thoroughly researched and includes material culled from civil servants He asserts that there were three basic reasons for the slow appreciation of what the wealth beneath the waves would mean for British industry — the spawning (with government encouragement) of an offshore supplies industry.

"First, industry and the million and the

"Enriched" training for the engineer starts to show results

Among those anxiously await ing the outcome of discussions on the allocation of cuts in university grants is Professor Bob Smith, founder of a scheme pioneered by Southampton University intended to increase cooperation between industrialists and academics.

In an extra year added to the conventional three-year degree course, engineering students are taught about design, accountancy, law, industrial relations and other broader aspects of professional engineering practices.

The first batch of students completes the course next month and cuts permitting, the university intends to double the number of places offered next year from 10 to 20 per cent of the total engineering intake. Other universities are now

Another student, while plan-ning initially to work with a multinational, wants to set up his own business within a few years.

Even though it appears in fill the gaps highlighted by the Firmiston Report and others there is a faction within the Department of Education which argues against such "enriched" courses on the grounds that increasingly scarce finances should be spread more thinly across more students. This is it has given rise to Profess Smith's unciety about the outcome of present discussions.

- Benguela Railway working conditions remain essentially unchanged.
- Elbar Industrial severely affected by the industrial recession in the United Kingdom.
- Tanks Oil and Gas provisional production licence granted on P/6 gasfield. Two blocks awarded in U.K. Seventh Round. Ashton Mining - interest in Tanaust sold for Aust $26.6 million and issue of 11 million Ashton Mining shares.

The development of the important AKI pipe at Argyle is estimated to cost Aust. $400 to 500 million. The development of our interest in the North Sea continues satisfactorily. Income from this source cannot however be expected before 1984. The company's holding in the Ashton Mining Company is a most valuable asset but is, of its nature, unlikely to produce a dividend revenue for some time to come. The circumstances of the Benguela Railway have again shown no important change during the year, Income from interest and dividends should show a substantial increase over 1980. It is to be hoped that trading results from Elbar will improve markedly.

Should the burgeoning Unlisted Securities sales does suggest that this year's target of Market carry a Stock Exchange Health net new sales of £3,000m (£250m a month) warning? Its present spectacular success is undoubtedly still a honeymoon period and the market's long-term viability has yet to be tested by the storms which will inevitably afflict a proportion of its companies.

When the storms occur the extent to which the USM carries with it a Stock Exchange seal of respectability will be the central question for regulators and regulated alike and should have all the makings of the kind of self-regulation row which has become so familiar.

The question, as ever, is one of perception. For the moment, the USM is quite clearly perceived as successful and confirms that its birth was long overdue and necessary, and to date, that success comes as no £1,600m, or possibly rather more as tenders at par were scaled down. Any conclusions the authorities can draw from that as to the strength of underlying demand for such stocks must be rather tentative, however. surprise to its creators.

Companies have been joining at a rate of two or three a week recently to bring the total to 48 entrants and another 20 or so applications are being considered. Indica-tions are that there will be at least 100 trading by the year end. Many more are expected from the Stock Exchange's Rule 163 where the 100 companies trading regularly were set this November as a deadline to switch to either a full listing or the USM. About 20 have done so and whether more follow depends to some extent whether the SE extends this deadline.

The obvious USM advantages are the negligible costs in comparison with a full listing, particularly Exchange entry fees, lower advertising costs, accounting requirements, as well as less public disclosure. Another is that companies need only part with 10 per cent of their equity—rather than 25 per cent—which is valuable to entrepreneurs in the growing stages. But there have also been rather too many instances where businessmen have used USM to raise cash from the business rather than use it to expand its cash base. So far, the Stock Exchange has been scrupulous in enforcing its rules and this has helped ease fears that USM invest-ments would necessarily be riskier.

Since there are fewer shares available market prices have tended to be more volatile and price-earnings ratios higher, whether this puts the hear on managements to go for short-term performance remains to be seen. Shares trade on an average 23 times fully taxed earnings almost three times higher than the main market, and total turnover in the seven months was almost £170m. Another element of risk will also come from the entry of new ventures, despite the original Stock Exchange stipulation that companies should have a three-year track-record.

Another group, which some involved in the USM have high hopes of, is investment companies. Two months ago the rules about the listing of investment companies were relaxed and companies could secure a listing even if they did not have a track record provided their policy was to invest exclusively in unlisted companies. A couple of companies have already sprung up as a result, First Charlotte Assets Trust which was launched without any investments (although oddly its shares are standing at a premium to net assets) and Murray Technology whose raison d'être is to acquire investments from investment trusts. For an investment trust the prospect of converting their unlisted investments to listed paper is especially attractive in view of the discount they sell to assets. For an issuing house, however, the idea of setting up its own investment company along the

First Charlotte lines is also attractive since it provides them with in-house placing > ket correctly and take positions if they are to make a worthwhile return. With overcapacity still remaining in parts of the jobbing system, further rationalization in the future cannot be ruled out. Much will depend on both the level activity and the resilience of the individual investor. Jobbers would come under further strain if the institutional dominance contiques increasing, although there are those who feel that the advancing tide has now been halted. Another possibility is that changes in the gilts market and a declining PSBR could cut into the lucrative profits earned here, thus encouraging firms to pull out of other difficult areas.

grocery-based multiple store chains are fighting one another for geographical supremacy and one spin-off is new jobs. This year there have been not far short of 10,000 from about 40 new store openings.

Initially Safeway has a 14-store, £21m programme running to the end of 1983 which will create 1,620 jobs. By 1986 it wants to increase its present 92 outlets to 140, with most of the new ones just about in the superstore league in size and definitely so in style:

A superstore has been defined as having at least 25,000 square feet of sales area, but some are much bigger because they carry many non-food lines, including gardening and do-ityourself items, Britain's 5,000 supermarkets are much smaller.

But what marks out a superstore is very much its ambience, greeting the shopper with the balmy aroma of bread fresh-baked on the premises, a spread of fresh foods from delicatessen of crisp vegetables and—the latest trend—the salty smells of a fresh fish counter and the pharmacy (proved long ago by Boots to be a strong trading line).

Roomy glossy with comfortably wide shopping aisles, serried checkouts and usually containing at least a "fast-food" counter and served by an adequate car park—that is a superstore, It caters especially for the car-borne, one-stop shopper. One-stop means the main shopping trip, weekly or at longer intervals, when it is convenient for the shopper, and profitable to the retailer, to have a wide range of goods available.

Safeway's entry means a speed up in the race for a limited number of suitable superted number of suitable super-store sites by the big multi-ples. Apart from Safeway these include J. Sainsbury, the Co-op-retail societies, BAT Industries' Mainstop chain, Fine Fare (part of Associated British Foods), Carrefour (Linfood Holdings), Presto '(Allied Suppliers') and Key Markets' Super Key (Fitch Lovell): A number of region-ally, based companies are also contenders in the race, notably contenders in the race, notably the William Morrison, chain based in Bradford, Yorkshire.

There are now about 300 superstores around the countryand saturation point, probably around double that number, could be reached in five years.

Each new superstore produces on average at least 200 jobs which means that last year's 32 new openings treated more than 6,000 jobs in super-stores alone, while recession slashed workforces in most of manufacturing industry.

Such job creation figures bring bleak smiles to smaller shop operators as superstores mop up business in what, in food at any rate, is a largely static market. Since some superstores are more labour efficient, the loss of jobs through the con-sequential closure of small units might in the end cancel out the gain of new jobs at the super-

The dash into superstores, to the detriment mainly of smaller, older supermarkets in and around town centres (although small independent shops have also lost their marker share) has been mounting since the mid-seventies.

There have been some problems in the past year. Tesco's lens in the past year. Tesco's switch from older, smaller units to suberstores for example, brought with it the penalty of high borrowings at a time of soaring interest rates. Tesco has just over 70 superstores and by the year's end will have 79 open. This year alone 3,200 new jobs will be created in the stores. There had been talk of spending £200m on superstore development last year but this figure has almost certainly been trimmed investment this reserve formers for the store of the ment this year is around £100m. Tesco has not been alone in refusing to go into schemes where the asking price was too high: so has Asda, but Mr Noel Stockdale, the Associated Dairies Group chairman believes asking prices have now stabilized, paying the way for the smoother development of superstores.

Asda's rate of openings is also easing slightly. This year it expects to spend around 160m. The company's three-year investment programme to April 1983 amounts to £160m. There are 84 superstores in the group with another 11 due to open with another 11 due to open before the end of next year.

So far, below a line drawn across the country from The Wash; Asda has seven superstores but it is aiming for a national building programme that should run to between six and eight stores a year. While Asda moves south, Sainsbury, in particular, is moving north from its traditional South-east base—it opens a Leeds store

although more widely spread

geographically, is picking up strength in the Home Counties and the large provincial towns. Tesco, Asda and J. Sainsbury between them now have a third of the grocery market, outpaced individually only by the com-bined Co-op retail societies. Co-op performance in super-stores in patchy, alchough some rerall societies, notably North Midlands, caught the public mood early. There are now about 45 superstores within the Co-op movement.

Carrefour looks upon most of its stores as "hypermasters" since they usually have a selling area of about 70,000 square feet, and so fall into the trade's hypermarket category. But Carrefour, whose latest outlet is at Swindon-regarded as a "superstore" because it is in a district centre development-puts in the features associated with superstores. Sainsbury is equally uncoun-mitted to superstores as a blanket concept preferring to see its outlets tailored to the needs of a particular area, But of Sainsbury's 208 outlets there are nearly 40 of more than 20,000 square feet which will rise to nearly 50 by the end of this year, most of them offering superstore-style facilities.

Like Safeway, Sainsbury needs less space than some of its competitors because more than 90 per cent of its lines are food and grocery although ten or more stores have a selling area larger than 25,000 square But Sainsbury is also involved in hypermarkets, four of which are already operating as Sava-Centres in a half share deal with British Home Stores, Sainsbury, probably the most successful of the multiples, may be right to show some besitation about the superstore boom Euromonitor, the market analysts, in a recent study sug-gested that although superstores are likely to account for 10 per cent of sales by 1983, growth will then level and speak at 12 per cent. Some superstores could then close prematurely.

way in the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) for additional last-minute savings in this year's spending is partly, a reflection of the Administration's over-optimism on this score. Officials in the budger office say that they were instructed to "low ball" all spending estimates, or vick all spending estimates, or pick the lower end of the plausible range for each programme for this year and next.

Ironically, Mr David Stock-man, the OMB director, last man, the OMB director, last week accused Democrats in Congress of doing just that in drawing up their proposed cuts for the 1982 fiscal year. The latest round of this year's budget fight is centring on his budget fight is centring on his move to bring Congress even closer to the Administration's original plan.

One reason for this is that - But even if the Administraoverall, the spending and tax tion does force through a still changes proposed by the Presi-tighter budget than Congress

> It is here—with the savings for future years—that the Administration's economic plan is most vulnerable. Even after the spectacular achievements of the first six months in office, the President has still to find more than $30,000m of cuts for 1983, and $45,000m for 1984, to meet the spending targets outlined for those years.

That compares with the $35,000m of curs now being made in next year's spending. made in next year's spending. Naturally the easiest cuts have already been proposed for this year. They leave large areas of the budget largely untouched—because of their political sensitivity—and are concentrated most heavily on grants and aid to state and local government, capital projects like road building and sewerage, and those social programmes with the weskest concrinents. with the weakest constituents.

But cuts in the later years will have to go after pensions, and other transfer payments, and probably defence, if they are to add up to the total

The Administration has so far been much more successful than anyone predicted in identifying, and then winning approval for sizable spending cuts. But repeating the trick in later years when it is needed to pay for tax cuts could be beyond even President Reagan and his budget director.

Dry cargo trading also suffered from a slowing down, particularly in the voyage sec-tor. This was compensated for to some degree by a more active time-chartering market which, apart from the norma participants, also saw a Soviet presence. The latter were reported to have booked three or four ships including a 26,000 tonner for a prompt Great Lakes round voyage from the Mediterranean with redelivery in the Skaw-Passero range. The rate was $7,700 a day. Another booking involved a 13,800 tonner taken at $5,350 a day for a trio in June/July via Burma with delivery in Bombay

Prices hold steady in Eurodollar bonds

Eurodollar bond prices held fairly steady over the week in spite of a worrisome rise in short-dated interest rates and a fairly large volume of offerings, writes AP-Dow Jones. . .

United States Federal funds rates rose above 20 per cent but this failed to elicit much selling, dealers said. Federal funds are the rate at which banks lend excess reserves to each other for short periods. A rise in these rates often indi-cates that banks are finding it difficult to obtain enough reserves to support their lending activities.

However, some market parti-cipants asserted that short-term movements in the Federal funds rate can be disregarded if the United States Central Bank achieves success in keeping the money supply under control, Managed by Deutsche Bank, the issue is expected to be priced next week to yield about 40 basis points more than a comparable five-year United States Treasury issue. Analysts said that if current market con-ditions continued, the issue could be priced as low as 98.5. This would raise the yield to large investors to about 15.35 per cent, assuming a 1.75 point discount from issue price.

"The market views the high Federal funds rate as moderately bullish since it seems that it is helping to slow the economy", says Mr Charles offered to yield 15.00 per cent Geisst, a bond analyst at Hill The issue gives investors the Samuel and Co. The US battle to preserve straddles industry appears to have degovernment-backed attack on the use of straddles which it claims could have destroyed the nation's markets by undermining their liquidity.

The straddle is a device in which the trader simultaneously buys a commodity for delivery in one month and sells the identical amount for delivery in g different month. His risk is small because as the price of the commodity moves, one side of the deal will show a profit, the other a matching loss. The point of the exercise is to profit rom changes not in the underlying value of the commodity but in the spread, or price ratio, between different months.

But straddles also have the great advantage that one half lways generates a paper loss, albeit it matched by paper gain. And in recent years it has become a standard tax avoid-ance technique for investors who do not know their cocoa from their copper to use straddles to generate such losses. These they use to offset profits which they have made somewhere else entirely—in the stock market, property of even art salesrooms. In this way they can slash their shortterm capital gains tax bills, a worthwhile exercise as the levy can rise to 70 per cent in. the United States. The profit-able side of the straddle is then allowed to run into the following tax year, which makes is a long-term capital gain tax-able at a maximum of 28 per cent. Alternatively, it may be come part of another straddle and rolled over indefinitely.

The Internal Revenue Service decided that such straddles were purely tax avoidance mea-sures and set about to have them banned. Along the way it picked up a measure of Congressional support and also the assistance of the United States Treasury. A shade ironic this as Mr Donald Regan, now the treasury secretary, was instru-mental in popularizing straddles during his time as head of Wall Street stockbrokers (and commodity dealers) Merrill Lynch. It remains to be seen, however, to what extent the poscher has turned gamekeeper, and background pressure from Mr Regan may well have helped the dif-ferent parties to thrash out a

Commodities

The industry has faced government threats before. Back Agriculture was overseer of the markets it produced a report saying: "There is evidence of large use of futures trading for the purposes of postponing, re-ducing or even completely avoiding payment of tax." That led to a clamp down against the more flagrant abuses in 1950, amid cries that it would destroy the operation of the market. In fact, they have flourished ever since which prompts some to treat the current cries of wolf with a certain disdain.

But there is no doubt in the industry's mind that a blanket prohibition of straddle trades would severely hit the markets today. For straddles are used almost daily by the professional speculators, without whom as struggling markets like the New York Futures Exchange illustrate, there is no liquidity and and that effectively means there is no market.

There is no question though that these speculators, even those who make all their gains and losses in the commodity market are still using straddles purely to cut their tax bill. Nor do they deny this. But their argument is that the business is so risky that what you make one year you more than likely lose the next and if you have siready paid tax at 70 per cent on the gains you have nothing left in the kitty to cover the losses in the following year. By using a straddle you cut the tax to 28 per cent which is a level they can live with. But if it was any more, the risk would be-come to great and they would take their money elsewhere.

New York Democrat, Mr Ben Rosethal, one of the sponsors of reforming legislation in the House of Representatives, but straddles were costing the $1,300m £700m) a year in lost taxes. He knew of one individual who had sheltered gains of $5.5m and a partnership which had still to pay tax on $11m or profits in Treasury bills.

Everyone now seems agreed at least in public, that such avoidance should no longer be tolerated. But after months of at times heated argument, the industry seems to have per suaded Washington that a straightforward ban on using straddles for tax purposes would indeed destroy the gol-den goose. So the thrust of the legislative proposals now is to ban artificial straddles but to leave untouched those which are part and parcel of the wor kings of the market.

What this means, bluntly, is that there will be one law for commodity traders and another for the public at large. The suggestion now gaining wide acceptance is for straddle losses to be usable only against gains made in commodities; and no longer to shelter profits made elsewhere,

Reflecting this mood, Mr Bob Wilmouth, president of the Chicago Board of Trade, says two types of traders should be exempted: those individuals with qualifying gains, by which be means income from trading commodity futures contracts, and those companies which use straddles to protect themselves from raw material price fluctu-

And that is where the debate currently stands. There had been hopes that legislation woul have been tacked onto the President's tax-cutting bill but that idea has now been abandoned. Having missed that chance and with Congress soon to break for summer, it will be the end of the year at the earliest before there is any chance of the proposals becom-

Public and Educational Appointments

Chief Scientist

Department of Health and Social Security

The Chief Scientist is the Department's authority on all scientific policy and research matters. The post, which carries Deputy Secretary rank, has important advisory functions at the highest levels in DHSS and full administrative responsibility for the work of about 30 research units and a budget in excess of £121/2 million

The role also involves fostering working relationships with the research councils, and especially at this time for consolidating interaction with the Medical Research Council in the field of bio-medical research and as the Council's capacity to undertake health services research increases.

MEPC clinches four-acre site in Reading

Property giant MEPC has clinched a substantial four-acre site in the centre of Reading for £12.1m. The site, in Kings Road, close to the town's commercial heart, was earmarked for a new headquarters building for the Berkshire

County Council some years ago. But earlier this year, the council put it out to public Outline consent already exists for 350,000 sq ft of offices and MEPC proposes to develop the site in three buildings ranging in size from 67,000 sq ft to 198,900 sq ft.

At the time of the tender, MEPC drew up detailed plans for development of the office for development of the office space and if these are accepted, work could start by November. On this basis the development would be ready for occupation by early 1984.

Rents in the Thames Valley have been rising at a fairly rapid pace in recent years and good office accommodation is being let at anything over £12 a sq ft. MEPC managing director and vice-chairman, Mr Chris Benson said last week that the group was basing its estimates on £12 a sq ft although it is likely to be much higher when the scheme is completed. Total cost is expected to be about

The development is the latest in a series which MEPC has announced over the past two or three years. It recently completed its £25m West One. hopping scheme in London's Oxford Street. The latest development also includes some accommodation, residential which will be provided by renovation of an existing building on the site.

Industrial developers are being urged to "think small" in their approach to new schemes because, according to a report published last week, there is tremendous potential for nursery and similarly sized units.

Architects and planning production premises will re-consultants Carl Fisher & duce.

Recession" in which they indicate rich pickings are available in small industrial develop-ment schemes for the future. The report comments that the increasing pace of modern technology will result in demand for smaller developments.

The report says that other than in exceptional circumstances there are unlikely to be many new industrial complexes of the 250,000 sq metres scale of accommodation in the future.

Manufacturers' needs are likely to be for more compact working areas, and the archi-tects say that these require-ments will conflict, with those of distribution companies. Warehouse building heights may increase and add capacity accessible by modern storage equipment, while those in production premises will refor its low level of involvement in this area of the market. There is little risk of the early supply in the small starter unit sector unlike some of the others and the report concludes that private investment capital could find a significant and rewarding opportunity awaiting

The report says that the property industry is poised to take off when the present recession ends and the economy starts expanding. But it warns that the "boom" will not be a mirror image of the one which marked the beginning of the last decade. Instead it will be a more measured expansion especially as both national and local governments are more sensitive to the needs of the community. At the same time, the report notes the property industry is more acutely aware of its own responsibilities.

will use this current period for reassessment of portfolios. In a climate of high interest rates. rising building costs and an uncertain economy, the natural heir existing portfolios.

Demand for office accommodation in Glasgow, despite the recession, has been surprisingly high and for the first time for many years the city is facing a shortage of space, according to the latest report from agents Jones Lang Woot-

Last year 230,000 sq ft of new or renovated office space was let which, together with usual lettings to more than 300,000 so ft, is in line with the annual sq ft has been pre-let in developments under construction or about to start.

During 1980, two schemes, covering a total of 68,000 sq ft, came on to the market, and both blocks were pre-let. In the current year, completions are expected to be just under 300,000 sq ft of which more than 100,000 sq ft is pre-let and, according to the agents, a further 90,000 sq ft has reached an advanced stage

If this letting goes through the agents warn that the only complete office building ready for immediate occupation is LPT Pension Fund's James Sellars House which is being built behind an existing façade on West George Street covering 32,000 sq ft. The only other remaining large amounts of space are the 50,000 sq ft balance in CIN Properties 105,683 sq ft scheme in George Square and 40,000 sq ft in the Savoy Tower in Sauchiehall best located modern office buildings now command rents in excess of £5 a sq ft. The highest rent achieved is understood to be £5.75 a.sq_ft for CIN's scheme where 51,000 sq ft were pre-let to chartered f its own responsibilities. accountants Arthur Wise investors and devel- McClelland Moores & Co. Roy Boyd plays Captain Jack in ITV's Scarf Jack, a new adventure serial set in the late eighteenth century (4.45 pm).

SCARF JACK (ITV 4.45 pm) is a rattling good six-part adventure yarn set against the background of the troubles in Ireland towards the end of the eighteenth century. Roy Boyd plays the clean-cut hero. Captain Jack, the curse of the vigilantes and herochmen of the vicious magistrate, Hunter Gowan. This evit man is arbitrarily killing peasants and burning their cottages—all filmed with stunning effect, something that will appeal to young boys if the ones I know are the norm. The brave Captain makes it his task to warn the cottagers of impending raids by the militia and then, when a reward is offered for his capture, decides to iourney to London to inform the authorities of the atrocities and then, when a reward is ordered for his capture, decides to journey to London to inform the authorities of the atrocities perpetrated in their name. Bernard Kay plays the villainous Gowan and John Carney, his five o'clock shadow making him look even more evil, the magistrate's victous benchman, Quillan. There is also an excellent theme tune written and played by John Mealing.

O The annual two week long marathon WIMBLEDON 81 begins today, as if you didn't know, and as it dominates our screens it would be a glaring omission not to mention the remarkable expertise the BBC has built up over the years of covering this event. To me, it is the best of all their sports coverage. So I look forward to hearing the relaxed tones of Dan Maskell, the urgent earnestness of Harry Carpenter and the erudite comments of the

• THE DESIRE TO BE HUNG (Radio 4 4.35 pm) is a talk by Robin Bryer on an artist's attempts to have his work accepted by the Hanging Committee of the Royal Academy. He talks from first-hand experience. His application was his second to exhibit at the Summer Exhibition. His was one of the 11,681 works which the Committee had to appraise this year and, after his successful application in 1980, this self-styled Town Planner and farmer's husband was full of confidence. If any listener has an ambition to see their work hanging alongside those of RAs in Burlington House then don't miss this programme.

House then don't miss this programme.

The British educational system of the future is the subject of the Monday Play THE TRUE STORY OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOL STRIKE OF 1990 (Radio 4 8.00 pm). The author is David Cregan, a former teacher now a full-time writer with four children being educated at State schools. The play is a comedy of sorts and covers events when drastic educational cuts of a Tory Government nine years hence forces the Public Schools to strike in order to preserve British Education in general. Heading the cast is Geoffrey Beevers who sympathetically plays the Public School

Labour chooses left-winger to contest Warrington

Mr Douglas Hoyle, a former Labour MP for Nelson and Colne and a left-winger, was chosen yesterday as Labour candidate in the Warrington by-election, which is expected to be held on either July 16 or

He gained 20 votes in the meeting, giving him an overall meeting, giving him an overall majority of one over the combined vote of Mr Michael Hall, a strongly favoured local councillor sponsored by the Cooperative Party, and Mrs Margaret Beckett, who as Margaret Jackson was MP for Lincoln from 1974 to 1979.

There was heavy trade union lobbying for Mr Hoyle as part of an attempt to stop Mr Hall securing the nomination.

The previous MP, Sir Thomas Williams, who had a majority of more than 10,000 at the last general election, had been a Coop-sponsored candidate and faction in the local Labour Party wanted a change to a trade union candidate.

Mr Hoyle, aged 51, is sponsored by the Association of Scientific, Technical and Managerial Staffs, of which he is a vice-president, and met the local party's preference for a condidate from the North-west candidate from the North-west with strong industrial con-While one of his rivals for

At a meeting between the Croydon North-West Liberal

Party and the Croydon Social Democratic Party no decision was made on which candidate or party will fight the by-election, although it is now generally assumed that the Liberals will take their turn.

Under the loose terms of the national alliance between the parties it was agreed after the Liberals had given Mr Roy Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr Hoyle was born and grew up in Lancashire and still lives at Chorley, his birthplace; he is widely respected among trade umonists in the north-west. He emphasized his local connexions "I am not coming from the south, I am from the northwest" he declared.

In an obvious libe at Mr. Jenkins, who travelled from his home in London to stay at a local hotel when he was chosen as the SDP randidate, Mr Hoyle said: "I am not going to move

The meeting in Croydon yesterday was held at the home of Mr William Pitt, the prospective Liberal candidate, who has fought the seat unsuccessfully a three prospective.

A joint statement issued afterwards by Mr Alan Mead, chairman of Croydon North-West Liberals, and Mr Tyrell best way to represent the people of Croydon, North West, is to aim towards an electoral alliance between the two parties on the basis of a joint candidature and campaign on an agreed manifesto."

Afterwards Mr Hoyle said:
"Let us tell the people that Thatcherism has failed and that there is only one answer and that is the Labour Party." He said the party would increase its majority in the by-election. The main issus would be un-employment, which in Warring-ton had more than doubled from 5 per cent in 1979 to more than 12 per cent.

Asked who he would support in the battle for the deputy leadership of the party. Mr Hoyle said the by election was not about the deputy-leader-ship, adding: "I have not made up my mind, but I hope all the candidates will come up to support me".

for the Conservatives since 1970.

Mr Pitt polled only 4,239 votes at the last general election, against Mr Taylor's 19,928 and in five Mr Benn. Eighty-eight per cent of TGWU members opted for Mr Healey and 19 per cent for Mr Benn.

Mr Radice said the Healey camp challenged the conven-tional wisdom that Mr John would win the TGWU vote on the deputy leadership on the first ballot and Mr Benn on the second.

"We have in no way con-ceded the TGWU vote. This poll shows Mr Healey's support in the union and we hope that we may get it." Mr Healey is to address a meeting of the Labour Solidar-ity campaign in Brighton today. Tomorrow, maintaining his punishing schedule, he will be in Bridlington, Humberside, to speak at a fringe meeting of the Confederation of Health Service Employees conference. "We aim to bring the results of the poll to the attention of as many people as possible." Mr Radice said. "We want to win the next election and when one talks of elections Denis Healey becomes more and more important to the Labour party." TGWU delay, Page 2
